Conference Previews

Atlantic Coast Conference

By Jeff LippmanTell Jeff your opinion!

There really is no putting it gently as far as Fantasy production from one of the major conferences in college football, the Atlantic Coast Conference. Among the BCS conferences, the ACC was arguably the worst place to find quality Fantasy talent in 2008.

When talking about Fantasy studs and the ACC, you have to start with Georgia Tech's Jonathan Dwyer, who finished last season among the best backs in the country and led the conference with 107.3 rushing yards per game for a total of 1,395 yards and 12 touchdowns.

Still, when you compare Dwyer to the rest of the nation, he topped out as the 21st best runner in terms of average yards per game. That's good, for sure, but it also means he finished last season as a No. 2 Fantasy running back, at best.

The best quarterback in the conference was freshman Russell Wilson of N.C. State, who led all conference quarterbacks in total yards and was a threat with his legs and his arm, but still really wasn't considered a viable Fantasy option in 120-team leagues. The best wide receiver -- UNC's Hakeem Nicks -was among the best in the nation in Fantasy, but alas, he's gone now. In fact, the top five pass catchers from 2008 have moved on.

Yes, talent remains for Fantasy use this season, but it should once again be quite limited as we expect the conference to remain among the worst of the majors in terms of depth of useful talent. Once again, it will start and end with Tech's Dwyer, who is entering just his junior season.

Top Players to Target

Jonathan Dwyer, RB, Georgia Tech: Georgia Tech likes to run the football and the reigning ACC Player of the Year is ready to better his 2008 numbers this season. Dwyer finished last season with the highest rushing total by any ACC player since 2006 and his combined 1,604 yards of offense was ninthbest in ACC history. Dwyer enters the season with the potential to once again lead the conference in rushing and should be among the top Fantasy backs in the nation once again. We expect even bigger things in 2009, which makes Dwyer a very sought after Fantasy option.

Darren Evans, RB, Virginia Tech: Evans finished among the top five Fantasy point getters in the ACC in 2008, as he rushed for 90.4 yards per game and totaled 1,265 yards and 11 touchdowns. Evans has unlimited potential, especially when considering those numbers came in his freshman season. Evans posted 253 yards on the ground against a decent Maryland defense last season and ended the year with 100-yard games in three of his last four contests. The more Evans ran the ball, the more he impressed and the better he became. Evans could easily top 100 yards per game this season for the conference favorite Hokies and should be among the best Fantasy backs in the nation in any league, though he remains a step below Dwyer.
C.J. Spiller, RB, Clemson: For years already, it seems, when Fantasy owners mentioned Spiller, they'd also have to talk about running mate James Davis. Davis was the better option last season, but the team is Spiller's now as he's the unquestioned No. 1 guy in 2009. Spiller averaged just over 52 yards per game last year but will inherit much of Davis' 58 yards per game of production. Spiller rushed for seven touchdowns last season and will also inherit much of Davis' 11. We fully expect Spiller to have his best season in Death Valley and depending on how the Tigers use him, he could finish among the best in the ACC. That said, the Tigers love to have options and Andre Ellington could eventually become the yang to Spiller's yin just as it has been with Davis. That would definitely hurt Spiller's value and cause him to fall just under other top backs like Georgia Tech's Dwyer and the Hokies' Evans.

Russell Wilson, QB, N.C. State: As just a freshman last season, Wilson led the ACC in total yardage with 213 yards per game. He was also the conference's best in terms of passing efficiency and finished with the most Fantasy points of any ACC quarterback en route to being named Rookie of the Year and to the All-ACC first team. But with 1,955 passing yards, 388 rushing yards and 21 total touchdowns, that still leaves him among the second tier of Fantasy worthy quarterbacks in 120-team leagues on Draft Day. His upside and ability to limit turnovers makes him a great sleeper option, but the bottom line is the best the ACC has to offer at the quarterback position simply isn't good enough to be a high draft pick in deep leagues.

Jacory Harris, QB, Miami: Harris might not finish among the top quarterbacks in the ACC in 2009, but he's definitely a guy to watch. That's because Miami installed a new offensive coordinator in Mark Whipple, who loves the gadget play and could drastically change the offense and turn the 'Canes into a high-scoring team once again. Harris would be a major benefactor of that and the fact that Robert Marve is no longer on campus and challenging him for the top job also helps his cause. Harris threw for 1,195 yards last season with 12 touchdowns and seven interceptions while splitting time with Marve. Harris has the ability to make plays with his arms and legs and with the team 100 percent his, he could be one of the best sleepers the league has to offer.

Jacoby Ford, WR, Clemson: Ford is the best returning wide receiver in the ACC as he finished 2008 with 55 catches for 710 yards and four touchdowns. Ford finished sixth in the conference in receiving last season behind his own teammate Aaron Kelly. Kelly, along with teammate Tyler Grisham, are gone now and Ford is the only dangerous option left for a Clemson passing game that figures to struggle now that leader Cullen Harper is also kaput. The ACC is seriously lacking in quality receiving talent and Ford is the best of the bunch.

Da'Rel Scott, RB, Maryland: The Terps' top returning back recorded 1,133 rushing yards last season with eight touchdowns and finished first team All-ACC and the MVP of the Humanitarian Bowl after totaling 174 yards against Nevada. The Terrapins will rely heavily on their ground attack and Scott could even become a dangerous option to catch passes as well, as quarterback Chris Turner won't have nearly as many receiving options this season. The real issue for Scott failing to finish in the top three in rushing in the ACC this season is the use of capable backups Davin Meggett and Morgan Green. Maryland would probably be happier if all three were interchangeable, therefore keeping them all fresher and healthier throughout the season. Scott has the upside for greatness but is somewhat injury prone and would have to find the end zone way more often in 2009 to be considered a top option in all leagues.

Graig Cooper, RB, Miami: As mentioned above, the Hurricanes have a new offensive coordinator in 2009 in Mark Whipple. Cooper, the team's most versatile player on a largely one-dimensional team last season, rushed for 841 yards to finish seventh in the conference. Expect Cooper to vastly improve his numbers under Whipple. You can also expect him to be asked to catch the ball more, though he did catch 29 passes for 113 yards last year and might even throw a few passes now and again. Fantasy owners would probably prefer he get a heavier dose of the carries, but the 'Canes also feature Javarris James and Damien Berry. That said, Cooper has extreme upside because we don't know what exciting things Whipple might have in store for him.

Owen Spencer, WR, N.C. State: Spencer enters his junior season as the secondleading returning receiver in the ACC, as he led the Wolfpack with 31 catchers for 691 yards and five touchdowns. Spencer was only in his first season catching passes from Russell Wilson, who was named first team All-ACC as just a freshman, so he'll likely have a much better rapport in '09, translating into more touchdowns and bigger yardage. However, while Spencer led the 'Pack in yards per game, the receptions per game leader was returnee Jamelle Eugene. Spencer's starting mate is very good as well and the duo will split the production once again. Spencer will definitely be among the top pass catchers in the conference, but State is mainly a running team and that will keep him from being in the top tier of Fantasy receivers.

Riley Skinner, QB, Wake Forest: If experience translated into Fantasy points, Skinner would be entering 2009 as the top Fantasy option in the ACC. The fifth-year senior has started 26 of the team's 28 wins over the most successful three-year period in school history. Skinner is the most accurate passer in ACC history and threw for 2,347 yards with 13 touchdowns and seven picks last season. The problem with Skinner is, for as good as he was last season, he was only fourth among returning ACC quarterbacks in Fantasy production. His Demon Deacons won't put up nearly enough offense to make him a quarterback to rely on in 120-team leagues. However, there are few more sure things than Skinner's consistency, so look for a solid senior season.

Top Sleeper

Thaddeus Lewis, QB, Duke: Go ahead, laugh. The Blue Devils have been jokes in football for so long we understand. But if you paid attention last season, head coach David Cutcliffe injected a shot of life in Durham and the leader of the resurgence is Lewis. The dual-threat quarterback has improved leaps and bounds since getting to campus three seasons ago and was a second-team AllACC pick last year, as he finished second in the conference with 206 yards of offense per game. The athletic signal caller threw 15 touchdown passes, added two on the ground and only threw six picks last season and with the Blue Devils a year older under Cutcliffe, they'll only get better. His downside is the fact that the top two receiving options are gone this year, but you can bet Lewis will not have trouble finding new weapons.

Biggest Bust

Christian Ponder, QB, Florida State: The Seminoles normally showcase a large array of Fantasy talent, so it's easy to think the team's sure-fire starter, the junior Ponder, will be a top option in 2009. Except, these are not your father's Seminoles, or even your older brother's. These 'Noles will struggle to score points. However, Ponder has some accolades to his credit. The only Seminole signal caller to rush for more yards in a season than Ponder's 423 last year was Heisman Trophy winner Charlie Ward. He became the fourth FSU quarterback to score rushing touchdowns in four straight games, though he only did score four. The problem Ponder will face is that he's going to have to throw the ball sooner or later, and that hasn't worked out too well for him yet in his career. Last season he threw for 2,006 yards and 14 touchdowns but was picked off 13 times and he's losing his top two receivers from that team. It's unknown who he'll be throwing to and it doesn't look like FSU will score nearly enough for Ponder to matter in anything but the smallest of leagues. Florida State just won't have that many Fantasy options this season.

Top Three Freshmen

Desmond Scott, RB, Duke: The Blue Devils return two running back options in Re'Quan Boyette and Jay Hollingsworth, but neither holds a candle talent-wise to the true freshman Scott. Scott is a top running back talent out of Durham and will surely have every opportunity to play right out of the gates for coach David Cutcliffe. Scott is a gamebreaker that will have moments of greatness in his inaugural season on campus for Duke. He has the ability to line up behind center or wide as a receiver and the Devils will utilize that to the best of their ability this season. He's one injury or one big game away from grabbing the starting job away from both incumbent backs, and he has the ability to be the conference's top freshman in 2009.

Jamal Womble, RB, North Carolina: The Tar Heels return Shaun Draughn as the starting tailback after he rushed for 866 yards and finished sixth in the ACC with 66.6 yards per game last season but that doesn't mean Womble, ranked the No. 13-rated RB recruit by Scout.com, won't have an immediate impact. Womble impressed coaches during the spring for his ability to be a very physical runner as he carried seven times for 50 yards in the spring game. Womble will be running behind both Draughn and goal-line guy Ryan Houston but might just be the best of both worlds in one. He's likely to get little playing time at first, but just as Draughn emerged when Greg Little began last year as the starter, Womble may force coach Butch Davis to play him for the benefit of the team.

Mike Glennon, QB, N.C. State: The 2009 ACC Freshman of the Year was none other than projected Wolfpack starter Russell Wilson, who finished as a first team All-ACC pick last season, his first in Raleigh. But state had Glennon redshirt last season and all the talk this spring centered around Wilson's injured knee and the fact that Glennon was awesome in the spring game as he amassed 272 total yards and directed two scoring drives. Wilson is healthy and the starter, but coach Tom O'Brien likes a little healthy competition and Glennon is one injury away from beginning what could end up being a historic career in Raleigh. Glennon is a much better passing quarterback and would be the better Fantasy option if he were at the helm instead of Wilson.

Big East Conference

By Jeff Lippman

Tell Jeff your opinion!

There is talent to be found in the Big East, oh yes. Don't mistake the league's high turnover rate of many of its stars from last season for a dip in Fantasy performers. There are gads of players chomping at the bit to make their mark on the conference.

Sure, the league isn't going to be the same without NCAA rushing leader Donald Brown of Connecticut or perennial Heisman contender Pat White from West Virginia. Sure, Rutgers lost a plethora of passcatching talent as Mike Teel, Kenny Britt and Tiquan Underwood are gone from Piscataway. Top NCAA rushers LeSean McCoy from Pitt and Syracuse's Curtis Brinkley are also gone. That's some of the best Fantasy talent from a season ago now no longer on college campuses.

The fun part is in discovering the next wave of Fantasy talent, and the Big East will not have a shortage of it in 2009. But the man who should be on the top of anyone's draft board when they are talking Big East is West Virginia tailback Noel Devine.

Devine finished third in the conference in rushing as a sophomore last season and did so with Pat White behind center. White was the conference's sixth leading rusher, so he definitely stole a whole bunch of the carries. Devine still managed 1,289 yards on the ground on only 206 carries -- over 100 fewer than the backs who finished ahead of him -for 6.3 yards per touch and just under 100 per game. Devine only scored four touchdowns on the ground but, again, White took many of those as well. There is no doubt a healthy Devine will be among the top backs in the nation and lead another deep Fantasy year in the Big East.

Top Players to Target

Tony Pike, QB, Cincinnati: Pike enters his senior season as a Bearcat as the undeniable No. 1 Fantasy quarterback in the Big East. Last season he wasn't even the undeniable starter on his own team to begin the season. My, how things change when you have his kind of talent. Pike shot past Chazz Anderson and Dustin Grutza on the depth chart and finished the season as the fourthbest passer in the league with over 2,400 yards, 19 touchdowns and just 11 interceptions. And he did that while missing two games due to injury and still finished second team All-Big East. Pike got stronger as the year progressed and finished the season by throwing at least one touchdown in the final eight games. There is no doubt that Pike will be among the top 30 quarterbacks in the nation in 2009 and with the core of the offense returning, including wideout Mardy Gilyard, who totaled 1,276 receiving yards last season, Pike has the weapons to be a Fantasy stud.

Jarrett Brown, QB, West Virginia: If we're comparing physical stature, Big East defenses better be about three inches and 30 pounds more scared of Brown behind center for the Mountaineers than they were of Pat White. At 6-foot-4, 220-pounds, Brown, who was a member of the WVU basketball team in 2008, will tower over opposing defenses. But after White, who passed for over 1800 yards, rushed for almost 1,000 and totaled 29 touchdowns with only seven interceptions last season, it is highly unfair to compare Brown to one of the greatest players in school history just yet. One thing is certain, Brown passed the spring game test by going 21 of 28 passing for 273 yards and four touchdowns. Brown is no stranger to game duty, either, and has a solid track record as White's backup. Over the past three seasons, Brown has gone 81 of 125 passing for 839 yards, five touchdowns and four interceptions and has rushed for 671 yards and seven scores. He's not as athletically gifted as White in terms of sheer speed and elusiveness -- and let's face it, few are -- but he probably has a better arm. Brown could emerge as the best QB in the Big East by season's end and is among the top options in the country.

Mardy Gilyard, WR, Cincinnati: For as athletically talented as West Virginia's Noel Devine is, the Bearcats' Gilyard might be even more fleet of foot. Gilyard racked up a school-record 1,276 receiving yards on 81 receptions and scored 11 touchdowns, but that's not all he accomplished en route to being named an All-American. Gilyard was also among the best kick returners in the nation, running two back last season. He's the top returning receiver in the conference and his incredible 15.8 yards per catch makes him one of the best Fantasy options in the nation this season. With quarterback Tony Pike returning for his senior year, Cincinnati could boast one of the most dynamic pass-catch combinations in the country.

Matt Grothe, QB, South Florida: Things should be business as usual for Grothe in 2009 and that should be just fine for teammates, coaches and Fantasy owners. Grothe has been nothing but consistent if not spectacular during his three seasons as the Bulls' signal caller. His senior season should be no different. He should overtake Pat White early on this year as the conference's all-time leader in total offense as he enters with 10,242 total yards. Grothe, who threw for a career-high 2,911 yards in 2008 with 18 touchdowns and 14 interceptions, will be getting his third new offensive coordinator this season in Mike Canales. This should benefit Grothe, however, as Canales is expected to open up the air attack and concentrate less on the power running game. He might not have the weapons that Pike has at Cincinnati or the sheer athleticism that Brown has for the Mountaineers, but Grothe is the best football player of the bunch and should be among the best quarterbacks in the league and the nation once again this year.

Victor Anderson, RB, Louisville: We told you about Devine already. Now let us tell you about the second-best running back in the Big East. Anderson finished fifth in the conference in rushing yards per game with 87.2 as a freshman last season and was tabbed the Big East Rookie of the Year. Becoming the Cardinals' first 1,000-yard rusher since 2005, he totaled 1,047 yards and eight touchdowns on the year and added another 100 yards through the air with a score. Anderson is built for speed at 5 -foot-9 and 185 pounds and has great vision that will help him run all over Big East defenses as a sophomore this season. Only injury can slow him down as we expect him to top 1,000 yards once again and finish among the top 50 tailbacks in the nation.

Delone Carter, RB, Syracuse: The Orange must replace a star in Curtis Brinkley, who finished fourth in the conference in rushing last season with 1,164 yards and seven scores. Carter seems to be the perfect choice and should immediately step into Brinkley's rather large shoes. Carter has experience after being named Big East All-Freshman back in 2006 as he amassed 713 rushing yards and four touchdowns in his first season. After two injury-plagued seasons -he played four games in 2008 with a hamstring problem after missing all of 2007 with a dislocated hip -- a 100 percent healthy Carter led all tailbacks with 53 yards on 14 carries in the spring game and has a shot to pick up where Brinkley left off and run for another 1,000 yards. Carter does come with baggage as it is uncertain how his injuries will impact him. If they do hold him back, he could finish among the top five tailbacks in the conference.

Mike Williams, WR, Syracuse: If you are wondering why you can't find Williams' name among the top returning Big East receivers, it's because Williams didn't catch a pass last season despite entering his senior season. Williams missed the entire year in 2008 as he was suspended for academic reasons, but when he takes the field this season he'll bring with him a streak of nine straight games with a touchdown catch, which still stands as the longest active streak in the nation. As a sophomore in 2007, Williams was named second team All-Big East after catching 60 passes for 837 yards and 10 touchdowns. At 6 -foot-2 and 204 pounds, Williams has the size and speed to stretch the field and should make first-year quarterback Ryan Nassib's job a whole lot easier. If Williams can hit the ground running and pick up where he left off, he could end up as one of the best receiving options in the Big East by season's end.

Tim Brown, WR, Rutgers: The Scarlet Knights lost more Fantasy talent from their receiving game than any other team in the Big East as quarterback Mike Teel and his top two options, Kenny Britt and Tiquan Underwood, are gone. The quarterback situation is still a bit cloudy, but the Knights know who will take over as their top receiving threat. Underwood may have bettered Brown in receptions, but Brown did more with them as he finished sixth in the conference with almost 44 yards per game. Brown averaged over 20 yards per catch and finished second on the team with six touchdowns. Brown is an absolute burner who can stretch defenses with the best of them. Rutgers will need that from him if they hope to come close to the receiving numbers put up with Teel at the helm. Brown will be the man among boys for the receiving game and should finish among the top receivers in the conference once again.

Andre Dixon, RB, Connecticut: If you weren't paying attention last season, a man named Donald Brown took carries for the Huskies and ended up leading the NCAA in rushing with over 2,000 yards and 18 touchdowns. He's gone now, but clearly UConn's offensive line can produce some stud backs and Dixon could jump right in where Brown left off. Dixon has experience replacing Brown as he took over due to injury during the 2007 season and rushed for 828 yards and three scores while tallying 280 receiving yards and another TD to finish second team All-Big East. Word from Storrs is that Dixon has rededicated himself after losing focus last year with Brown being the main man. He's primed to pick up where he left off in 2007 and could have a huge year. He isn't a top three back in the conference just yet but he definitely has that kind of ability.

Shamar Graves, TE, Rutgers: OK so the Knights have questions. Far more questions than answers, in fact. Graves is definitely an answer. Tim Brown and Graves will be the top two returning receiving threats after Graves caught 16 passes for 227 yards and three scores last season. He wasn't a factor early on in the season but finished strong as he started six of the final seven games and scored a touchdown in three straight during that streak. Entering his senior season, Graves will be looked upon by whichever youngster wins the quarterback job as a go-to guy whenever they get into trouble. Graves will surely be the top tight end option in the conference on Draft Day. If the cloud covering the quarterback situation clears, he could finish among the best pass-catching tight ends in the nation.

Top Sleeper

Alric Arnett, WR, West Virginia: West Virginia is going through a bit of transition as Pat White is gone from campus. Jarrett Brown is a more than capable backup who might have a better arm. Arnett was a JUCO transfer in 2007 and wore a Mountaineers jersey in a game for the first time in 2008. He immediately became a starter and led the team with 466 receiving yards on 35 catches with six touchdowns. Arnett has size at 6-foot-2, 187 pounds and only got stronger at the end of the season with a career-high seven catches for 93 yards and two touchdowns in the Meineke Bowl win over North Carolina. Arnett becomes an even better Fantasy option if coach Bill Stewart decides not to reinstate suspended receiver Jock Sanders for the season. That decision isn't expected to come until just before the year begins but could make Arnett one of the best Fantasy wideouts in the conference.

Biggest Bust

Kordell Young, RB, Rutgers: Young has vast talent and nobody can question that fact. In only eight games last season, Young rushed for 554 yards and five touchdowns. The problem with the local Jersey product is a long laundry list of injuries. Stewart was hurt not once, but twice during the 2008 season. He rushed for 94 yards and a score in the opening game of the season and then missed the next four with an injury. He bounced back to have the season that he did only to re-injure the same knee he had surgically-repaired back in 2007 during the PapaJohns.com Bowl against N.C. State. That knee injury has caused him to sit out the entire spring leading up to this season. He has been rehabbing every single day and very much plans to be ready for the first game of the season. That said, he remains a huge injury risk and the Knights have smartly moved on to other potential options. Mason Robinson, Joe Martinek and fullback Jourdan

Brooks all return to potentially take carries away from even a healthy Young and we just don't see too much opportunity for him to shine. He could end up being a nice story, but the chips are stacked against him being a viable Fantasy option this year despite his experience.

Top Three Newcomers

Adam Froman, QB, Louisville: We're still not 100 percent certain that Froman will be named the Cardinals' starting signal caller as coach Steve Kragthorpe is keeping mum on the issue. That said, Froman seems the best option out of a group that includes Justin Burke and Zach Stoudt after throwing for 3,876 yards and 40 touchdowns in junior college. Froman would have been the obvious choice under Bobby Petrino, but Kragthorpe's offense is less pass happy as he'll be looking for the signal caller who shows the most consistency and balance. Still, you can't argue with his JUCO numbers or the fact that he has the most talent of the three. Running back Victor Anderson will make life easier for whoever wins the job and if that man is Froman, he'll be an automatic sleeper option across the board in Fantasy.

Dion Lewis, RB, Pittsburgh: The Panthers and coach Dave Wannstedt must replace one of the best tailbacks in school history in LeSean McCoy. Lewis seems to be up to that task and is Wannstedt's choice to do so. Lewis is like a pinball on the field and has as much shake-and-bake ability as any back in the league as just a true freshman. Lewis enrolled in school early so that he could take part in spring drills and led the offense in the spring game with 34 yards on 12 carries. He averaged 14.1 yards per carry during his senior season in high school and should be one of the most exciting freshmen in the conference in 2009. He'll be seeing the bulk of the carries left behind by McCoy and if he can do even half as well he'd be worth having on Fantasy rosters in most leagues.

Greg Paulus, QB, Syracuse: Paulus comes over to Syracuse as a graduate senior after a long and successful basketball career at Duke. He's certainly not the team's starter heading into the season, as that honor is bestowed upon sophomore Ryan Nassib. Still, 'Cuse finished 3-9 last year under Cameron Dantley, who is now the backup ahead of Paulus, and is in dire need of an improvement. If Nassib comes in and fails, the Orange already know what they have with Dantley and could go to Paulus before long. Coach Doug Marrone saw Paulus work out with his former employer, the New Orleans Saints, this offseason as he attempted to get back into football shape by taking pointers from Drew Brees. There is no guarantee that Paulus even sees the field for the Orange, but he definitely brings intrigue with him into the season.

Big Ten Conference

By Jeff LippmanTell Jeff your opinion!

The Big Ten has always been a league known for producing big bruising tailbacks. Last season was no exception.

In 2008, several of the nation's best running backs did battle in the conference that houses the jewels of the Midwest.

The only problem is, most of that talent is gone now, hoping to score their next touchdowns in NFL stadiums across the country. Many feel the Big Ten will be weak this season across the board. After all, five of the conference's top six running backs have moved on. Shonn Greene left lowa early, Ohio State's Chris "Beanie" Wells did too. Michigan State's Javon Ringer has graduated along with Kory Sheets of Purdue. And then there is P.J. Hill, who left school early but didn't get drafted.

Wherever their next steps take them, it won't be the college gridiron in 2009, where a new crop of Big Ten backs hopes to step right into their departed footsteps. Except, this season, it might be two quarterbacks, both of whom can do plenty of damage on the ground, that draw the most Fantasy attention.

Top Players to Target

Juice Williams, QB, Illinois: Perhaps the top quarterback returning in the Big Ten this season, the Ron Zook-coached Williams is a highlight reel behind center. The Big Ten's leader in total offense by almost 80 yards per game last season with 324.3, Williams is returning for his senior year ready to lead the Illini to a BCS bowl game. Williams threw for 3,173 yards to lead the conference and finished eighth in rushing yards with 719. He scored five touchdowns on the ground, threw for 22 and his only real downside came with 16 interceptions, which also led the conference. Zook's team throws the ball and Williams brings back top receiving option Arrelious Benn. Together they should once again finish atop the Big Ten, making Williams a top option for any Fantasy league.

Terrelle Pryor, QB, Ohio State: There is only one quarterback in the Big Ten who could compete with Illinois' Williams in terms of athletic ability, and that is OSU's Pryor. As just a freshman last season, splitting time behind center with Todd Boeckman, Pryor finished ninth in the conference in total offense with almost 150 yards per game. The most highly recruited college player in years before he got to Columbus, Pryor finished 10th in passing with over 100 yards per game and accounted for 18 total touchdowns and only four interceptions. Boeckman is gone now and the team is 100 percent Pryor's. What he does with it remains to be seen, however, you can expect him to be among the top Fantasy options in the country. He'll need to refine that passing game, but that should come. Pryor might not be the best Fantasy option in the Big Ten, but he has the most upside.

Evan Royster, RB, Penn State: The leading returning rusher in the Big Ten is Penn State's Royster, who finished third in the conference with 1,236 yards and averaged 95.1 per game with 12 touchdowns. Entering his junior season, Royster, a former high school lacrosse standout, will look to team with quarterback Daryll Clark and get coach Joe Paterno one more BCS bowl win. In his first season as the Lions' top back, Royster racked up five 100-yard games and scored a touchdown in eight out of the 13 contests. He also proved capable of catching passes, something the team will ask him to do more of in 2009. Royster should lead the way as far as Big Ten running backs go and should be taken very early on Draft Day.

John Clay, RB, Wisconsin: Clay returns to the Badgers after a very productive freshman season a year ago, totaling 68 yards per game on the ground. Clay, however, didn't even lead his own team. P.J. Hill was the team's starter and rushed for 89.3 yards per contest to finish sixth in the conference. Hill left early for the NFL Draft -- and didn't get drafted -- and all the running duties now fall on Clay. He rushed for nine touchdowns and saved his best for the end of the season, rushing for 100 or more yards in three of his last five games. His first 1,000-yard season is almost assured barring injury and we think he might be better than Hill ever was for Wisconsin. Royster may be the prize of the Big Ten at the outset, but Clay has the ability to pass him like he's standing still.

Daryll Clark, QB, Penn State: Clark and the rest of the quarterbacks in the Big Ten all fall below the elite levels of Juice Williams and Terrelle Pryor, but that doesn't mean Clark won't do big things for PSU. Clark was the fifth-best passer in the conference last season with just under 200 yards per game and was also in the top five in total yards as well. The senior was second in the league with 19 touchdown passes and only six interceptions. What set Clark apart from other Big Ten quarterbacks was his 10 rushing touchdowns. The problem with this is that Clark is not expected to do much running in 2009, especially with the likes of Evan Royster around, and the fact that Joe Paterno wants him to a pass-first guy. He'll score a few on the ground, but 10 is probably unlikely. Also, the Nittany Lions are replacing much of their offensive line and receiving corps. Still, Clark will fight through that and continue to be among the best signal callers in the Big Ten in 2009.

Adam Weber, QB, Minnesota: Weber should once again be one of the most consistent options at quarterback in the Big Ten. Having taken every snap from center over the previous two seasons, Minnesota hopes 2009 sees more of the same after he finished fourth in the conference in passing with 212 yards per game and second in yards with 2,761 with 15 touchdowns and eight interceptions. Weber also scored four times on the ground. This season could be different, however, as Weber underwent offseason shoulder surgery. Still, he made a quick recovery and figures to continue to be the Gophers' rock this year. Minnesota will no longer play in a dome, which means the weather element gets thrown into play. Plus, freshman MarQueis Gray will methodically be worked into the offense to get his feet wet. Those two issues could hurt his value somewhat, but Weber will continue to be one of the best signal callers the Big Ten has to offer.

Arrelious Benn, WR, Illinois: Benn wasn't the best receiver in the Big Ten last season in terms of numbers. That distinction goes to Minnesota's Eric Decker. Still, what Benn brings to the table, and the reason he's more highly regarded -- only slightly -- than Decker heading into 2009, is his ridiculous athletic ability and the fact that the junior is a monster at 6 -foot-2 and 220 pounds. Benn could have been a top NFL draft pick and likely will be after this season as he caught 67 passes for 1,055 yards and finished in the top 20 nationally. Benn also rushed for over 100 yards and scored five total touchdowns. He'll team with top Big Ten quarterback Juice Williams, who clearly sees Benn as his favorite receiver, once again and should put up gaudy numbers in what figures to be his last season in Champaign.

Eric Decker, WR, Minnesota: Decker actually finished 2008 statistically better than Benn at Illinois. Decker caught 84 passes for 1,074 yards as a junior to lead the conference and finish in the top 20 nationally, one spot ahead of Benn, in fact. Decker, who caught seven touchdown passes to lead the conference, will once again team up with Adam Weber, who is also expected to put up monster numbers. The combination of Decker and Weber should be right up there with Benn and Williams of the Illini as the best pass-catch duos in the conference and two of the best in the entire nation.

Mike Kafka, QB, Northwestern: Normally when a team, especially a team not necessarily know for its football, breaks in a new quarterback, it isn't a recipe for Fantasy stardom. This is not a normal situation. The starter for the first four games in 2006, Kafka injured himself and relinquished the job to C.J. Bacher and never saw it again. He heads into his senior year as the No. 1 guy once again and that could mean big things for the Wildcats. Kafka showed what he could do last season at Minnesota. In that game, he went 12 of 16 for 143 yards through the air and two touchdowns and added a Big Ten single-game rushing record for a quarterback with 217 yards on the ground. Kafka is one of the best athletes at the position in the league with only Illinois' Williams and OSU's Pryor as better dual-threat guys, and that makes him one of the best sleepers in the conference.

Jewel Hampton, RB, lowa: Somebody has to replace leading Big Ten rusher Shonn Greene, who amassed over 1,800 yards and 20 touchdowns last season, as the top tailback in Iowa City. Greene will be playing on Sundays for the New York Jets this season and so the top job falls to last year's backup, Hampton. As a freshman behind Greene last season, Hampton carried 91 times for 463 yards and seven touchdowns. His showcase game came in October at Indiana when he carried 22 times for 114 yards and three scores. The Hawkeyes will continue to run plenty this season and it will be Hampton leaving defenders in his wake instead of Greene. He has the ability to pick up right where Greene left off and should be among the best backs in the Big Ten, and likely the nation, this season.

Top Sleeper

Ralph Bolden, RB, Purdue: The Purdue Boilermakers have had no trouble running the football in recent years, regardless of the name on the back of the tailback's jersey. Last season, filling in for injured intended starter Jaycen Taylor, senior Kory Sheets broke 1,000 yards and finished fifth in the conference in rushing. Purdue uses a spread offense that is perfect for sprinter-type backs with great speed and elusiveness and that shouldn't change under new head coach Danny Hope. Hope will likely have Taylor back this year but he was still recovering from the ACL tear during the spring and the sophomore Bolden stepped up in a big way. Bolden rushed for 420 yards and four scores on 66 carries over four spring scrimmages and at 5 -foot- 9,194 pounds, he resembles the prototypical back for the spread offense. Bolden still has loads to prove but has the upside to finish among the top tailbacks in the Big Ten.

Biggest Bust

DeLeon Eskridge, RB, Minnesota: As a true freshman in 2008, Eskridge did everything coach Tim Brewster could have asked of him and more. Eskridge led the Gophers with 678 rushing yards and seven touchdowns and only had four carries for 12 yards after the first two games of the season. He took over for Duane Bennett and established himself as one of the best backs in the conference almost immediately. So why do we consider him a possible bust? First of all, he was injured for much of the spring, though he's expected to be 100 percent for the season. Despite his successes last year, Minnesota still finished 104th in the nation in rushing offense and is very much a passing team with the solid pass-catch duo of Adam Weber and Eric Decker. Also, Weber and backup MarQueis Gray, a freshman who figures to see plenty of reps, are threats on the ground, which will take carries away. The final reason we consider him a possible bust is the spring emergence of freshman Kevin Whaley, who should see carries as well. For a team that doesn't rely heavily on the run, getting a decent amount of touches per game might be a challenge.

Top Three Freshmen

Tate Forcier, QB, Michigan: We figured somebody had to be of at least some Fantasy value playing for Michigan. Has the school fallen this far to where the only real player worth noting is a true freshman? Alas, yes, that is the case, but the freshman is definitely worth considering in Fantasy. Forcier is an athletic playmaker in the mold of coach Rich Rodriguez's last great stud, Pat White. The 6-foot-1 native of San Diego enrolled in school early to get a leg up on the competition after posting 1,266 rushing yards and 12 touchdowns over his final two seasons in high school. He's the perfect guy to run Rodriguez's no-huddle spread offense. That said, he'll have to battle back Nick Sheridan and Denard Robinson. Still, he shouldn't have trouble doing that and could end up being the man who helped turn the Wolverines back into a winning program.

Edwin Baker, RB, Michigan State: Michigan State has a gaping hole at tailback about the size of 126 yards per game and 22 touchdowns now that Javon Ringer has moved on to the NFL. To fill that void, the Spartans are expecting to turn to a true freshman. Baker, similar in size to Ringer at 5 -foot-10 and 205 pounds, is projected by many to be the top guy for the Spartans in 2009. He'll have to compete against about six other guys, including sophomores Ashton Leggett and Andre Anderson and true freshman Larry Caper, but Baker appears to have the inside track and the most talent and could explode onto the scene.

Jamaal Berry, RB, Ohio State: With Chris "Beanie" Wells now in the NFL, the Buckeyes were expected to have options to replace him. The top returning candidates are Daniel Herron and Brandon Saine, who are solid, but the most talented guy was expected to be the true freshman Berry, who was one of OSU's top recruits and one of the best tailback recruits in the nation. However, Berry was arrested for felony marijuana possession this offseason, which could keep him off the field in 2009. The good news for Berry is that he reported to summer school, which bodes well for his playing this year. The coaching staff will wait and see, but if Berry is able to play he could immediately head to the top of the depth chart as he's the best suited for the spread option offense that OSU wants to run this season with Terrelle Pryor at the helm.

Big 12 Conference

By Michael HurcombTell Michael your opinion!

Throughout the years, college football teams have been vying for titles like "Linebacker U" or "Wide Receiver U" based on their success of producing talent at a certain position.

Well, in 2008 the entire Big 12 conference earned the right to be called "Quarterback U."

If you needed a reliable Fantasy quarterback, you went to the Big 12 in search of an able gunslinger. By season's end, the Big 12 had the nation's top passing offense (Texas Tech), three of the top 5 (Oklahoma, Missouri), half of the top 10 (Texas, Kansas), six in the top 15 (Nebraska), seven in the top 20 (Kansas State), eight in the top 30 (Texas A&M) and 10 in the top 40 (lowa State, Oklahoma State).

The only two schools out of the top 50 were Colorado (194.0 ypg) and Baylor (180.7 ypg).

The household names in Fantasy circles were Heisman winner Sam Bradford, Texas Tech's Graham Harrell, Missouri's Chase Daniel, Colt McCoy of Texas, Oklahoma State's Zac Robinson, Todd Reesing of Kansas and Nebraska's Joe Ganz.

While graduation and NFL aspirations took its fair share of casualties, there is still plenty of pickings left at quarterback in 2009.

Bradford and McCoy opted to return for a final year as they battle again for the Heisman.

Reesing has racked up more than 7,700 total yards of offense and 72 total touchdowns the last two seasons.

Robinson wasn't fazed in '08 after losing offensive coordinator Larry Fedora. He still passed for a career-high 3,064 yards and 25 touchdowns, while adding another 562 yards and eight touchdowns on the ground.

Baylor's Robert Griffin continues to emerge as one of the nation's most electrifying dualthreat quarterbacks.

Iowa State's Austen Arnaud looks to improve in his second year as a full-time starter after his inaugural season ended on a high note. Arnaud had 766 passing yards, 94 rushing yards and five touchdowns in his final two games in '08. The news gets even better as former Rice offensive coordinator Tom Herman has brought his no-huddle, spread offense to Ames, lowa. Herman was the same architect that turned Chase Clement into a Fantasy stud.

But the talent doesn't end under center in the Big 12. There are plenty of other players that Fantasy owners need to make part of their Draft Day plans.

Top Players to Target

Taylor Potts, QB, Texas Tech: Before we totally abort the quarterback chatter we can't forget about the guy -- Potts -- who is slated to replace the NCAA's second all-time leading passer. We have all come to know Tech head coach Mike Leach as a genius of the spread offense. Ever since 2000, his starting quarterback hasn't passed for less than 3,400 yards or 20 touchdowns in a season. Since 2002, none of Leach's starting quarterbacks have passed for less than 4,100 yards and 30 touchdowns. The odds of Potts succeeding in his first year as a starter are very high.

Detron Lewis, WR, Texas Tech: Sticking with the Red Raiders' high-flying offense, Lewis had his breakout year in '08 after replacing Danny Amendola as Tech's ' Y ' receiver. Lewis, who totaled 76 catches for 913 yards and three touchdowns in '08, should be one of the leaders in the Tech receiving corps again in '09. Aside from the ' $Z$ ' receiver, the ' $Y$ ' option is usually the second most used receiver in Leach's passing tree. Tech definitely needs a go-toguy after losing Michael Crabtree to the NFL.

Jake Sharp, RB, Kansas: Jayhawks coach Mark Mangino made the fatal flaw in '08 of not trusting Sharp as his primary back after losing 2007 leading rusher Brandon McAnderson. By season's end, Mangino was calling Sharp a savior. After totaling just 28 touches (24 carries) through the first four games, Sharp ended the season as Kansas' leading rusher with 860 yards and 12 touchdowns. He also added 25 catches for 283 yards and one score. Mangino isn't likely to pass over Sharp in '09.

Dezmon Briscoe and Kerry Meier, WRs, Kansas: Most might not have realized that Kansas had one of the best receiver rotations in the country last season, led by Briscoe and Meier. Briscoe really took center stage after Dexton Fields was limited by a nagging foot injury for most of the season. Briscoe set single-season school records with 1,407 receiving yards and 15 touchdowns. Meier, who also is listed as KU's backup quarterback to Reesing, wasn't far behind. He led the Jayhawks with 97 receptions last season. He finished with 1,045 receiving yards and eight touchdowns. Reesing should continue to find comfort in throwing to both players in the fall.

DeMarco Murray and Chris Brown, RBs,

 Oklahoma: Bradford wasn't the only standout in the Oklahoma backfield on its run to the national championship game last season. The team had a pair of 1,000-yard rushers in Murray and Brown. Murray missed the Big 12 championship and national title game due to a hamstring injury, but he still finished the year with 1,002 rushing yards, 395 receiving yards and 18 touchdowns (14 rushing). This coming after totaling 13 rushing touchdowns the year before. Murray says his rehab is going great and will once again be ready to pair with Brown, who led OU with 1,220 rushing yards and 20 touchdowns in '08. Brown has been a touchdown vulture for the Sooners the last three seasons and should continue to plow his way into the end zone in '09. It's not often we find two high-end Fantasy running backs in the same backfield.Ryan Broyles, WR, Oklahoma: The '08 season proved to be great learning ground for Broyles. After missing the opener against Chattanooga, the then redshirt freshman had a breakout debut against Cincinnati with seven catches for 141 yards and one score. He followed that up with two more scores in his second college game against Washington. While Broyles wouldn't touch 100 yards or have a multi-touchdown game again in '08, he still finished third on the team with 46 catches, fourth with 687 yards and fourth with six receiving scores. OU lost the likes of Juaquin Iglesias, Manuel Johnson and Quentin Chaney, so Broyles now becomes the Sooners' top returning wide receiver. The chemistry he developed with Bradford should go a long way.

Jermaine Gresham, TE, Oklahoma: While millions of dollars waited for him in the NFL, Gresham opted to return to school in the fall and try to leave Oklahoma as not only the most decorated tight end in school history, but one of the top receivers. With just six more touchdown receptions, he tops Mark Clayton's school record of 31. Gresham, a favorite to win the Mackey Award (NCAA's top tight end), took home All-American honors in '08 while racking up 66 catches for 950 yards. His 14 touchdowns set an OU record for a tight end. Gresham is the team's top returning receiver after Iglesias (1,150 yards) graduated. The only other player in the country that will rival Gresham as the most drafted Fantasy tight end is BYU's Dennis Pitta.

Kendall Hunter, RB, Oklahoma State: Aside from losing their offensive coordinator (Fedora), Oklahoma State was also without 1,000-yard rusher Dantrell Savage last season. Hunter helped put State's rushing concerns to bed as he racked up nine 100yard games, 1,555 rushing yards and 16 touchdowns. He also had 198 receiving yards and one touchdown. Hunter has averaged 6.5 yards per carry in his first two seasons and already sits 11th all-time at OSU with 2,251 rushing yards. Hunter, who averaged 119.6 rushing yards per game in '08 (7th nationally), should continue to mesmerize the Stillwater, Okla., faithful in '09.

Dez Bryant, WR, Oklahoma State: While much of the focus at wide receiver in the Big 12 heading into last season was on Crabtree, Bryant quickly drew attention to himself with a nine-catch, 236-yard, three-touchdown performance in the second game against Houston. Bryant would use that game to propel himself to All-American recognition. Bryant would finish with a pair of 200-yard games, six 100-yard games and 21 total touchdowns (two punt returns) last season. He amassed 87 catches for 1,480 yards after having 43 catches for 622 yards as a freshman in 2007. The loss of tight end Brandon Pettigrew could allow opposing defenses to double team Bryant until someone else steps up in the receiving game. However, the defense still has to respect Robinson and Hunter so the 6-2, 215 -pound receiver should have some open space to make plays.

Brandon Banks, WR, Kansas State: He might be smallish in stature (5-7, 150 pounds), but Banks stands tall on the football field. Just ask the opposition. Banks was Big 12 Offensive Newcomer of the Year in '08 as he burned the competition for 67 catches, 1,049 yards and nine touchdowns. KSU needed a go-to-guy after 2007 leading receiver Jordy Nelson matriculated to the NFL, and the Wildcats found that option in Banks, who was signed out of junior college. Kansas State has had a major overhaul of personnel -- losing both coach Ron Prince and Josh Freeman -- but head coach Bill Snyder is already raving about Banks' ability. Banks had six catches for 141 yards and one touchdown in the spring game and it looks as though his good fortunes will continue in '09.

Jordan Shipley, WR, Texas: After enduring plenty of injury hardship throughout his career, Shipley finally got to showcase his talents in '08. McCoy's roommate led the Longhorns with 11 touchdowns, while finishing second on the team with 89 catches for 1,060 yards. He had three games with 10 or more catches and three 100-yard receiving games. Shipley was awarded a sixth year of eligibility by the NCAA after he missed the 2004 and 2005 seasons due to injury. No one is happier than McCoy, especially after '08 leading receiver Quan Cosby graduated.

Roy Helu Jr., RB, Nebraska: With 1,000yard rusher Marlon Lucky back in the fold in '08, it seemed as though Nebraska was set at running back. But Lucky proved to be the wrong type of back for first-year coach Bo Pelini's power running game. The 6-0, 215pound Helu Jr. eventually emerged as NU's go-to-back. He finished the season with three 100 -yard outings and 510 rushing yards over the last four regular-season games. For the season, Helu had 803 rushing yards, 266 receiving yards and seven touchdowns. He averaged 6.4 yards per carry, the highest by a Nebraska back in seven years. Helu missed the last half of spring practice with a pulled hamstring, but the coaches were raving about his speed and power before going down with the injury. He should be ready to be NU's feature back again in the fall.

Derrick Washington, RB, Missouri: Washington answered the call for the Tigers in '08 after they lost backfield staple Tony Temple to graduation. The then sophomore back made the Mizzou faithful forget all about Temple as he became the eighth player in school history to break 1,000 rushing yards $(1,078)$. He also rushed for 17 touchdowns, which was one shy of tying the school's single-season record, and totaled 19 touchdowns, which tied the single-season school record. Washington also emerged as a viable pass-catching back with 29 receptions for 277 yards. The miraculous part was that Washington accomplished all this while playing on a bum knee in the second half of the season. Washington likely deserves to be on our bust list since he is coming off knee surgery, loses playmaking quarterback Daniel and offensive coordinator Dave Christensen, but he is still expected to be a feature player for Gary Pinkel's Tigers.

Jeff Fuller and Ryan Tannehill, WRs, Texas A&M: Fuller and Tannehill became just the second Aggie tandem to catch 50 or more passes in a season in '08. The duo was able to stand out in what was an otherwise bleak season for A&M (4-8). Tannehill led the way with 55 catches for 844 yards, while Fuller added 50 catches for 630 yards and a school single-season record nine receiving touchdowns. Fuller was one of coach Mike Sherman's crown jewels in his first recruiting class in '08 and was able to make an immediate splash. He looks to continue that trend in '09. Fuller had nine catches for 147 yards and one touchdown in the team's spring game. As for Tannehill, Sherman said he will get to compete with Jerrod Johnson at quarterback during fall drills, but in the end we believe Sherman will show Tannehill means more to the team at wide receiver.

Jamie McCoy, TE, Texas A&M: McCoy played the position carousel at A&M before Sherman slotted him in at tight end last season. Well done coach. McCoy was among the best tight ends in the Big 12. He finished third behind Missouri's Chase Coffman (90 catches for 987 yards) and Gresham (66 catches for 950 yards) with 43 receptions for 500 yards and five touchdowns. He had eight receptions of 20 or more yards and 30 of his 43 catches went for first downs. The 6-3, 224 -pound tight end should once again be a top target for Johnson in the fall.

Top Sleepers

Adron Tennell, WR, Oklahoma: Calling it disappointing is probably taking it lightly when it comes to Tennell's college career thus far. After being one of the nation's most decorated prep receivers in 2006, the 6-4 Tennell has yet to live up to the hype. A torn ACL in 2007 threw a wrench into the plans, but now that Oklahoma graduated Manuel Johnson (714 yards, nine TDs), Juaquin Iglesias ( 1,150 yards, 10 TDs) and Quentin Chaney (504 yards, two TDs) at wide receiver, the chance for Tennell to be a key target for Bradford is on the horizon. Tennell is listed as a starting wide receiver heading into the season.

Brandon Collins, WR, Texas: Like Oklahoma, graduation robbed Texas of its top receiver -- Quan Cosby (92 catches, 1,123 yards, 10 TDs). While Shipley is back in the fold, there are plenty of yards to be had in the Longhorns' offense with McCoy slinging passes. Collins has showed continued growth at wide receiver since his freshman season in 2007. He finished fourth on the team in ' 08 with 35 catches for 430 yards. He also had three touchdowns. However, Collins really came on late in the year. He totaled nine receptions for 185 yards and three touchdowns in three starts down the stretch. It seems as though he was already throwing his name into the arena as the guy willing to pick up the slack for Cosby.

Sedrick Johnson, WR, Iowa State: We already talked about Arnaud taking his game to the next level in '09 with the arrival of Herman from Rice, but he is going to need some receivers to help with his progression. Enter Johnson. The 6-4 receiver had a standout spring learning Herman's no-huddle, spread offense. He burned the defense in the spring game with nine catches for 100 yards, and his numbers could have been even better had he not dropped a few passes. Johnson had 18 catches for 188 yards and three touchdowns as a freshman, but with the loss of leading receiver R.J. Sumrall, lowa State is looking for a new go-to-receiver. Johnson could be the guy.

Lyle Leong and Alexander Torres, WRs, Texas Tech: As we talked about earlier with Detron Lewis, the ' $Z$ ' receiver usually has the most success in Leach's spread offense. Before Crabtree it was Joel Filani. Before him it Cody Fuller. And before him it was Carlos Francis. You get the picture. This year the battle is brewing between Leong and Torres. Leong, who had 18 catches for 206 yards and three touchdowns last season, missed spring practice for undisclosed reasons. That allowed Torres to really wow the coaching staff. If Leong is back in the fall, he will compete with Torres for the starting ' $Z$ ' job. He might also get some time at ' $X$ ' receiver with Edward Britton. It's kind of tough for Fantasy owners to pick one of these receivers on Draft Day with so much uncertainty at the position, but it will be one of the top position battles on our radar.

Biggest Bust

Baron Batch, RB, Texas Tech: Batch returned to the gridiron in '08 after sitting out the ' 07 season while still recovering from a ruptured Achilles' tendon suffered in 2006. It looked as though the extended rest helped as Batch emerged as Tech's top running back. He rushed for 758 yards and seven touchdowns on 113 carries, while adding 45 catches for 449 yards and one score. The reason he makes our bust list is that Harrell is no longer under center. While history suggests that Tech's offense should still be proficient under Potts in '09, he will still be a first-year starter. Harrell was a three-year starter in '08 and had the experience to keep drives going. He also knew when to check down to the running back. Potts could be a little hesitant initially as he adjusts to a fulltime role. Also, Aaron Crawford and Harrison Jeffers are pushing for playing time out of the backfield.

Top Freshmen/Newcomers

Christine Michael, RB, Texas A&M: Aggies head coach Mike Sherman pulled a rabbit out of his hat by landing Michael, widelyconsidered one of the nation's top running back recruits. But it's not hard to see why the Beaumont, Texas, native chose A&M. The Aggies lost the tandem of Jorvorskie Lane and Mike Goodson, who combined for more than 4,000 rushing yards and 60 touchdowns in their career. Michael saw the chance to make an immediate impact as a freshman and has the goods to do it. He totaled 20 or more rushing touchdowns in each of his final three prep seasons and is a threat for six points every time he touches the ball. His biggest competition will be Cyrus Gray and Bradley Stephens.

Eric Ward, WR, Texas Tech: Oklahoma doesn't lose many prospects to Texas Tech, but Ward pulled a fast one on the Sooners and now the Red Raiders have a talent that could help make up for the loss of Crabtree. Ward attributed two reasons for his switch -a chance to be part of a pass-heavy offense and special teams coach Clay McGuire making Tech feel like home. Ward enrolled early and went through spring drills, which might only help his chances of getting on the field as a true freshman. He is a bit small at 5-11, 190 pounds, but in Leach's offense small receivers can succeed, and Ward certainly has the talent as one of the top wide receiver recruits out of talent-laden Texas.

Cameron Kenney, WR, Oklahoma: Sooners head coach Bob Stoops won't waste a ton of time worrying about losing Ward since he did bring in Kenney, a 6-1, 190-pound receiver from Garden City (Kan.) Community College. He is widely considered one of the top junior college recruits after totaling 86 receptions for 1,213 yards and eight touchdowns in two seasons at Garden City. He is fast off the line and can blow by corners with his 4.48 40speed. He is also not a half bad placekicker and punter, but Oklahoma intends to line him up at receiver. He could help immediately in the fall after the Sooners lost three of their top receivers from '08.

By Michael Hurcomb Tell Michael your opinion!

It's time for a little college football trivia, so pigskin enthusiasts it's time to sharpen your pencils and brush up on your recent memory.

1. Which FBS player led the nation in total offense ( 403.2 ypg ) in 2008?
2. Which Conference USA player was the only quarterback to throw for more than 5,000 yards last season?
3. Which C-USA player was tied for third in the nation with 44 touchdown passes in ' 08 ?

If you answered all the above as Houston quarterback Case Keenum, then you would be correct. Pat yourself on the back.

Heading into the 2008 season, Keenum was hardly a blip on the radar. While he won CUSA Freshman of the Year honors in 2007 despite the fact he split time under center with Blake Joseph, Keenum was still in a heated quarterback competition last summer as first-year head coach Kevin Sumlin took over for Art Briles.

After the dust settled, Keenum edged out Joseph and didn't look back. He rolled up the stats on the way to C-USA Player of the Year honors and now heads into the 2009 season atop the CBSSports.com College Fantasy Football rankings.

Keenum finished second in the nation in '08 behind Texas Tech's Graham Harrell with 5,020 passing yards. On top of his passing yards and touchdowns, he rushed for another 221 yards and seven touchdowns. Keenum was just one of four players to total more than 50 touchdowns (Harrell, Heisman winner Sam Bradford and Rice's Chase Clement), and he has thrown for at least 300 yards in 13 straight games. He broke the 400-yard passing barrier five times last season and hardly made mistakes as he was picked off just 11 times in 589 passing attempts.

If Houston's offense is eerily similar to Texas Tech's, you would once again be correct. Offensive coordinator Dana Holgorsen spent eight years learning under Tech offensive mastermind Mike Leach before taking over the Houston offense in '08. He instilled pretty much the same principles in order for Keenum to thrive under center and the 6-2, 210-pound gunslinger proved to be a quick study.

Now, heading into '09 Keenum is no longer flying under the radar and is even being mentioned in the Hesiman talk.
"As good as he played, he'll be the first to tell you he can play better," Sumlin told the Houston Chronicle. "If he plays better, we'll win games. If we win games and he continues his level of play or gets better, then I think (the postseason accolades) will come just because of the nature of the beast."

Top Players to Target

Jacob Bower and G.J. Kinne, QBs, Tulsa: The most interesting position battle in regards to College Fantasy Football is at Tulsa, where Bower and Kinne battle it out for the starting quarterback job. True freshman Shavodrick Beaver is also in the mix, but he is the dark-horse candidate of the trio. Everyone figured Bower was the heavy favorite to replace David Johnson having been the backup in '08, but head coach Todd Graham has been leaning toward Kinne for a while. He said he hopes to name a starter 2-3 weeks into fall camp, so we continue to wait anxiously. Why, you ask? Tulsa has had one of the most prolific offenses in the country the last few seasons. Despite the loss of cooffensive coordinator Gus Malzahn, the Golden Hurricanes should still be able to move the chains with ease. Johnson and Paul Smith before him were must-own Fantasy options, so will the winner of this year's competition.

Bo Levi Mitchell, QB, SMU: Mustangs head coach June Jones shocked the nation last year when he chose the true freshman Mitchell to start at quarterback over incumbent Justin Willis. It was a way for Jones to put his stamp on the SMU program as a first-year head coach and potentially groom a four-year starting quarterback in his explosive spread offense. Mitchell did have his growing pains -- 57.6 percent completion rate and 23 interceptions -- but gained valuable experience. He passed for 2,865 yards and 24 touchdowns, which is the third most in Mustangs' history. He also had four 300-yard passing games and four games with at least three passing touchdowns. As long as Mitchell continues to progress and not regress, he could develop into a special Fantasy player

Joe Webb, QB, UAB: You probably didn't hear a lot about Webb in '08 as UAB limped their way to a 4-8 record, but make no mistake about it -- he is a solid dual-threat quarterback. Webb enters '09 as one of two returning quarterbacks that passed for at least 2,000 yards and rushed for at least 1,000 yards last season (Colin Kaepernick, Nevada). Webb ranked 15th in total offense (282.3 ypg), while setting a C-USA rushing record by a quarterback with 1,021 yards.

Webb passed more than 200 yards six times and rushed for more than 100 yards four times. He totaled 21 (11 rushing) of UAB's 31 touchdowns in '08. The only area he needs to improve is turnovers (16 interceptions last season).

Trevor Vittatoe, QB, UTEP: Vittatoe is coming off back-to-back 3,000-yard seasons. He is already third in school history with 6,375 passing yards, trailing only Jordan Palmer $(11,084)$ and Billy Stevens $(6,485)$. Vittatoe set a single-season UTEP record with 33 touchdown passes in '08. He has thrown 58 touchdown passes to only 16 interceptions since inheriting the starting gig as a redshirt freshman in 2007. He has passed for at least 200 yards 19 times, 300 yards eight times and 400 yards twice. UTEP had the 14th best passing offense last season ( 284.17 ypg ) and are expected to rank high again in '09 as Vittatoe returns most of his top targets, which we will get to later.

Austin Davis, QB, Southern Miss: One of the biggest decisions Larry Fedora had to make as a first time head coach in ' 08 was picking a quarterback to run his spread offense. It boiled down to two quarterbacks with Davis eventually besting Martevious Young. The move paid off big time for Southern Miss as the Golden Eagles finished 7-6 and capped it with a bowl win against Troy. Davis set more than a dozen school records, including passing yards in a season $(3,128)$. He also finished 16th in the nation in total offense ( 279.7 ypg ). He passed for 23 touchdowns to eight interceptions as a redshirt freshman, while rushing for another 508 yards and nine touchdowns. His best game was a 461-yard, four-touchdown effort against Rice, but he also totaled six touchdowns (five rushing) against UAB and finished the season with at least 200 total yards and two touchdowns over the final seven games.

Damion Fletcher, RB, Southern Miss:

Analysts and Fantasy owners were anxious to see how Fletcher would fit into Fedora's plans in '08 since USM's first-year coach promised to air it out. But a lot of folks forgot that while Fedora was the offensive coordinator at Oklahoma State, the Cowboys were as explosive on the ground as they were through the air. Fedora put Fletcher's electrifying moves to good use. Despite being hobbled by injury at times, Fletcher still amassed more than 1,000 rushing yards for a third straight season $(1,313)$. He rushed for 10 touchdowns, while adding 33 receptions for 246 yards and one score. He is already to the school's career rushing leader with 4,287 yards. Fletcher rushed for 200 or more yards twice in '08 and should continue to rack up the yards as a senior in '09.

Jamad Williams and Charles Clay, RBs, Tulsa: While we said the Tulsa quarterback competition was the most interesting positional battle from a Fantasy standpoint, the Golden Hurricanes also have another intriguing race among the running backs. Tulsa lost 1,000-yard rusher Tarrion Adams ( 1,523 yards, 14 TDs) to graduation and Graham has another open competition brewing. Williams is the team's top returning rusher with 523 yards, but Clay is looking to become more of a factor in '09 after he faded a bit into the background last season. Clay totaled just 609 yards (145 rushing) and 11 touchdowns (nine receiving) after posting 1,328 yards ( 1,024 receiving) and eight touchdowns (one rushing) the year before. Charles Opeseyitan is also in the mix, but Williams and Clay have paid their dues the last two seasons and seem ready for starring roles.

Bryce Beall, RB, Houston: Beall was one of the nation's top impact freshmen last season, as he broke the 1,000 -yard barrier. Not too bad for a guy that showed up primarily as a two-star running back on the recruiting circuit. Beall became the first freshman in Houston history to rush for 1,000 yards in a season. He had six 100-yard rushing games and three games with at least one rushing and receiving touchdown. He ended up the team's top scorer with 102 points. In all, Beall totaled 1,247 rushing yards, 496 receiving yards and 17 touchdowns (13 rushing). The fact he has a capable quarterback like Keenum to open up the field and the wheels to burn rubber toward the end zone, we can't wait to see what Beall does as an encore in '09.

Curtis Steele, RB, Memphis: Tigers head coach Tommy West had been searching for a go-to-back since DeAngelo Williams' illustrious and record-setting career came to an end following the 2005 season. Steele fit the bill in '08 and put West's concerns to bed. Steele hit the field last season after taking a redshirt year in '07 following his transfer from junior college. He didn't disappoint his coach as he ran his way to C-USA Newcomer of the Year honors. Steele got off to a sluggish start before posting 109 rushing yards in the fourth game against Nicholls State. He managed 100 or more rushing yards in six of his last 10 games and finished as the NCAA's 33rd best rusher (94.1 ypg). Steele totaled 1,223 rushing yards and seven touchdowns. He averaged 5.6 yards per carry and added 187 receiving yards. Steele became just the fourth player in school history to reach 1,000 yards. Steele is looking to go out with a bang as a senior in '09.

Andre Anderson, RB, Tulane: The Green Wave grabbed a little bit of the national spotlight in '07 as running back Matt Forte bowled his way to a 2,000-yard season. With Forte no longer on campus in '08, there was a huge hole to fill in the Tulane backfield. The Green Wave would turn to Anderson to get them over the hump, but unfortunately his promising season was cut short by seven games due to a season-ending shoulder injury. The 6-0, 211-pound running back ranked first in rushing yards ( 142.0 ypg ) and all-purpose yards ( 175.67 ypg ) in C-USA and was fourth nationally in both categories before banging up his shoulder against Rice. He had four 100-yard games and two 200yard outings. Anderson finished the season with 864 rushing yards, 202 receiving yards and eight touchdowns (seven rushing). Anderson is a big-time bounce-back Fantasy candidate.

DeAndre Brown, WR, Southern Miss:

There is no doubt Brown shocked the college football world in '08 when he opted to sign with Southern Miss despite the fact he was one of the nation's top recruits and could have gone to any premier program. Brown's decision proved to be a great deal for both parties. He earned freshman All-American honors after setting a school single-season record with 67 catches and USM landed their marquee receiver. Brown totaled 1,117 receiving yards and 12 touchdowns. He got off to a kind of a sluggish start, but once he had his breakout 12-catch, 221-yard, fourtouchdown performance against Rice, Brown became one of the focal points in the offense down the stretch. Unfortunately, his freshman season ended on a sour note as he broke his leg in the team's bowl game against Troy. He has been slow to recover, but Brown is worth the flier in Fantasy because of his big-play potential.

Damaris Johnson, WR, Tulsa: The crown jewel of Tulsa's '08 recruiting class, the Golden Hurricanes plucked Johnson right off the Louisiana high school gridiron and inserted him into the starting lineup last season. The 5-8, 175-pounder ended up leading Tulsa with 53 catches and 10 touchdowns. He was second on the team with 743 yards. The Golden Hurricanes didn't limit his abilities to receiving, also lining him up in the backfield and on kickoff returns. Johnson rushed for 327 yards and one touchdown and ranked fifth nationally in allpurpose yards (176.7). Johnson continue to showcase his big-play ability in the spring as he totaled 126 receiving yards, 23 rushing yards and two touchdowns in the team's final scrimmage. Tulsa will continue to look for ways to put the ball in Johnson's hands in '09.

Emmanuel Sanders and Aldrick Robinson,

 WRs, SMU: While June Jones was at Hawaii, he gave us plenty of Fantasy-friendly players. In his first year at SMU, he delivered much the same despite the fact the Mustangs went 1-11. SMU's big guns at wide receiver were Sanders and Robinson. Sanders wasn't such a big shock. He was coming off a 74 -catch, 889-yard and nine-touchdown season in '07. Many folks targeted him as the guy Jones would probably lean on the most, and Sanders came through with 67 catches for 958 yards and nine touchdowns. However, it was Robinson that rose from obscurity to lead SMU with 1,047 yards and 11 touchdowns. He had one 200-yard game, four 100-yard contests and three twotouchdown performances. He was able to stretch the field with his blazing speed, and Robinson finished sixth in the nation with 104.7 receiving yards per game. With Mitchell only getting more comfortable under center, it's kind of scary to envision the type of seasons Robinson and Sanders could have in the fall.Jeff Moturi and Kris Adams, WRs, UTEP: Sanders and Robinson weren't the only receiving duo making headlines in C-USA last season. Moturi and Adams put on quite a show for the Miners. Moturi was the big ticket player heading into '08 after posting 65 catches for 891 yards and 13 touchdowns on his way to first-team All-Conference honors in '07. But he faced plenty of double teams last season and that opened the field for Adams, who ended up leading UTEP with 958 yards and 14 touchdowns. Adams had at least one touchdown over the final six games, two three-touchdown performances and four multi-touchdown outings. Moturi had 655 yards and nine touchdowns and both players managed 50 or more receptions. Vittatoe has quite a pair of standout receivers to chuck the ball at this season.

&ctassonts

Tyron Carrier, WR, Houston: You didn't think we forgot about the Houston receivers? You had to figure Keenum needed someone to throw all those passes to last season. For the early part of the year Patrick Edwards was Keenum's favorite target until a gruesome broken leg cut his campaign short. That allowed Houston local Carrier to burst onto the scene as a redshirt freshman. He led Houston with 1,026 receiving yards and was second with 80 receptions and nine touchdowns. He became the first Houston freshman to record 1,000 receiving yards. He had five 100-yard receiving games and caught at least three passes in all 13 games. The familiarity with Keenum should go a long way for Carrier in the fall.

Cody Slate, TE, Marshall: Ever since Bryon Leftwich and Chad Pennington left the Thundering Herd, there hasn't been much to rave about with regards to the Marshall passing game. One of the few bright spots the last few seasons has been the play of Slate. He has been an impact tight end since his freshman season in 2006. He has at least 40 catches and 500 yards the last three seasons. Slate got off to a sluggish start in '08 due to a leg injury and missed two games, but he finished strong on his way to 60 catches, 510 yards and eight touchdowns. Slate scored in seven of the last nine games. He has 169 catches for 2,012 yards and 19 touchdowns in 34 career games. Slate is one of the few elite Fantasy tight ends worth reaching for on Draft Day.

Top Sleepers

Brynn Harvey, RB, UCF: While Tulane had little trouble replacing a 2,000-yard rusher in '08, the same couldn't be said for UCF, who seemed lost without Kevin Smith in their backfield. They tried a handful of backs before settling on the true freshman Brynn down the stretch. Brynn led the team with 125 rushes for 519 yards. Unfortunately, he found the end zone just once. Brynn was UCF's workhorse late in the season and totaled 70 or more yards in four of the last six games. He had 90 yards and a career-high two touchdowns in the season finale against UAB, leading many to believe he could be ready for a 1,000-yard campaign in '09.

Jeremy Williams, WR, Tulane: Had a pair of injuries (hand, knee) not abruptly ended Williams' season after five games in '08, this writer believes he would have ranked among the elite Fantasy receivers. Williams made great progress as a freshman and sophomore before getting off to a blazing start as a junior. In just five outings, Williams posted 27 catches for 437 yards and five touchdowns. He had a pair of 100-yard outings and scored at least one time in four of five games. After he exited the lineup, the Tulane passing game fell apart since Williams still finished second in receiving and first in receiving touchdowns despite missing more than half the season. If he can shake off the rust, Williams has the moves to blow by opposing secondaries.

Chaz Rodriguez, WR, Houston: Mark Hafner was a huge catch in Fantasy last season because he was a tight end playing as a wide receiver in a spread offense. He was one of Keenum's favorite targets as he led the squad with 86 catches and 11 touchdowns. He was second to Carrier with 907 yards. After a breakout season, Hafner has graduated and left Fantasy owners scouring for his replacement. While Rodriguez is not listed as a tight end, he stands to inherit Hafner's starting position as the ' $Y$ ' receiver. Rodriguez had his finest season in ' 08 , recording 40 catches for 418 yards and one touchdown. If Rodriguez can hold onto his starting position, his numbers stand to rise significantly.

Top Bust

Darius Marshall, RB, Marshall: Marshall has paced the Thundering Herd's running game the last two seasons and had a career campaign as a sophomore in '08. He rushed 224 times for 1,099 yards and five touchdowns -- all career highs. He had seven games of 100 or more yards with four coming in the last five outings. He has averaged 5.0 yards per carry since his freshman season and is also a big part of the Marshall return game. Unfortunately, there are a few factors going against Marshall. While he is a Doak Walker candidate, we are still unsure if coach Mark Snyder is going to bench Marshall for any upcoming games for some off-the-field issues this spring. Also, the Thundering Herd's schedule is a bit intimidating with top run defenses like Virginia Tech, East Carolina, UCF and West Virginia on the docket. Marshall is going to have to put up big numbers against the soft opponents, if he wants to net a second straight 1,000-yard season.

Top Newcomers/Freshmen

Nick Adams, WR, UAB: The Blazers are hoping Adams can infuse a little excitement into the team's passing game in '09 and help them improve from their '08 average (197.3 ypg). The Fort Scott (Kan.) Community College product caught 48 passes for 784 yards and seven touchdowns as a freshman in '07. He took a redshirt year in '08, so he could play three seasons on the FBS level. Despite checking in at 6-2, 195 pounds, Adams has been clocked in the 40-yard dash at 4.37. If he can stretch the field, he might just become a deep threat for UAB.

Brett Hodges, QB, UCF: While UCF has said the starting quarterback job is Rob Calabrese's to lose, the Knights welcomed Hodges, a Wake Forest transfer, with open arms. Hodges spent four seasons at Wake Forest, mostly serving as a backup to Riley Skinner. He made two starts and appeared in 11 games for the Deamon Deacons, completing 46 of 69 passes for 402 yards, one touchdown and three interceptions. Hodges is added insurance for the Knights in the event Calabrese, who passed for just 664 yards as a freshman, gets off to a slow start.

Justin Jordan, WR, Southern Miss: Jordan is another transfer, this one from Blinn Community College (Texas), that could pay immediate dividends for his team in '09. Jordan was a junior college All-American last season after totaling 55 receptions for 715 yards and seven touchdowns. He was also quite explosive out of the backfield. Count'em -- eight of his 23 carries went for touchdowns. You know Fedora is going to draw up some plays to take advantage of Jordan's 4.4 40speed. It can't hurt to have added insurance in case DeAndre Brown is slow to recover.

If Notre Dame head coach Charlie Weis intends to keep his job after the 2009 season, he knows his fate lies in the hands of Jimmy Clausen, the Irish's blonde-haired, blue-eyed Californian quarterback.

You don't have to tell Clausen either what the '09 campaign means, as Notre Dame is on a mission to re-enter the national picture.
"I'm taking it personally," Clausen told the Sporting News. "Coach Weis will not get fired because of me."

Let's take a trip back in time to the spring of 2006. It was April 22 of that year that Clausen gave his verbal commitment to Weis and Notre Dame in front of a packed crowd at the College Football Hall of Fame in South Bend, Ind.
"It all comes down to coach Weis, you know, throughout the whole process he was straightforward with me," Clausen said at his commitment press conference. "What I remember the most is that on the first day a coach could go out and visit, coach Weis was at my school looking at a junior and not a senior. That really left a mark in my heart."

Even before he committed to Notre Dame, Clausen -- the younger brother of former Tennessee gunslingers Casey and Rick Clausen -- was being talked about as the best recruit in the nation and a future NFL first-round draft pick.

As Brady Quinn was making his exit from Notre Dame, the analysts felt there would be little drop off in production for the Irish with as acclaimed a talent as Clausen ready to take over.

Too bad it didn't play out that way. While Clausen has started 22 of the Irish's 25 games since 2007, Notre Dame has won just 10 games in that span.

A lot of Notre Dame boosters called for Weis' ouster following the 2008 season, but folks in charge of making the decision opted to give their head coach at least one more season to right the ship. With Clausen finally developing into the All-American quarterback he was destined to be, the Notre Dame brass could be lauded for their patience with Weis.

Clausen already ranks among the top 10 alltime Notre Dame gunslingers in many passing categories. He is second in passing yards per game (192.4), second in completion percentage (59.3), fourth in completions (406), fifth in attempts (685), fifth in touchdown passes (32) and sixth in passing yards $(4,426)$.

As a sophomore in 2008, Clausen had the third-most prolific passing season in school history. He completed 268 of 440 passes ( 60.9 pct) for 3,172 passing yards. Clausen tossed 25 touchdowns and established records in every major passing category by a Notre Dame sophomore quarterback. Quinn is the only quarterback in Notre Dame history to top Clausen (2005 and 2006).

If you need more convincing that Clausen is headed down the right path, just look at his final performance of the '08 season. He completed 22 of 26 passes for 401 yards and five touchdowns and no interceptions -- a problem that has plagued the young quarterback -- against Hawaii in the Sheraton Hawaii Bowl. Clausen's passing yards, passing touchdowns and completion percentage ( 84.6 percent) were personal bests as well as Notre Dame individual bowl records.
"I don't know how the kid does it," wide receiver Golden Tate said. "Mentally, he's there. Physically, he's gotten bigger. He's faster. His arm is strong. There were times this summer when I busted my lip expecting a soft ball and he delivered a tight spiral. He's developing fast and I'm excited to see him lead the team this year."

Top Players to Target

Ricky Dobbs, QB, Navy: With the pickings slim among just three FBS Independent teams, we had to put Dobbs on this list despite the fact Navy hardly throws the football. It's what Dobbs can do with his feet that will give him some Fantasy relevancy in deeper formats. Dobbs made his college debut in '08 when injuries sidelined quarterbacks Kaipo-Noa Kaheaku-Enhada and Jarod Bryant. Dobbs appeared in eight games, completing 9 of 16 passes for 212 yards and one touchdown. However, he finished third on the team in rushing with 495 yards and tied for the team lead with eight rushing touchdowns. With Kaheaku-Enhada and Bryant out of the picture, Dobbs is now the unquestioned starter heading into '09. It will be interesting to see what kind of damage he can do with a full season of snaps.

Armando Allen, RB, Notre Dame: The Irish were a bit one-dimensional in '08, relying heavily on the passing game. The rushing attack averaged just 109.7 yards per game, ranking 100th in the nation. Weis is looking to change that in '09 and is expected to lean heavily on the junior Allen, a former prep standout from Florida. Allen hasn't been an innocent bystander since his freshman season in '07 and has shown steady progress the last two seasons. He led Notre Dame in rushing with 585 yards last season and was second with three touchdowns. He also proved to be a very good pass-catching option. Allen finished second with 50 receptions, third with 355 yards and tied for fourth with two touchdowns.

CeDarius Williams, RB, Army: It's out with the old and in with the new at Army. Firstyear coach Rich Ellerson has replaced Stan Brock and is looking to get the Black Knights back on track. One area that hasn't changed is the offensive scheme. Army will stick with a triple-option offense under Ellerson. The Black Knights had great success statistically running the football in '08, finishing ninth in the nation ( 241.4 ypg ). Unfortunately, their leading rusher -- Collin Mooney (1,339 yards and eight touchdowns) -- has graduated. After spring practice concluded, Williams was atop the depth chart at fullback ready to replace Mooney. Williams did not see varsity action as a freshman in '08, but has already done a nice job impressing the new coaching staff.

Alex Teich, RB, Navy: The Midshipmen have led the nation in rushing for an astounding NCAA-record four straight seasons. In fact, they have not finished worse than third in rushing since the 2002 season. Navy runs the triple-option to perfection, and it seems no matter who they plug in there they get results. As we have mentioned with Army, the fullback is vitally important to the triple-option's success. Also like Army, Navy must replace their starting fullback -- Eric Kettani, who rushed for 986 yards and four touchdowns last season. The Middies are ready to turn to the sophomore Teich as the guy who replaces Kettani. Dobbs and Teich worked tirelessly this summer on the quarterback-fullback exchange, which is one of the most fundamental aspects of the tripleoption offense. The pair woke up at 5 a.m. at least three times a week to get into a routine on the football field. Teich only had seven carries for 24 yards last season, but we expect those numbers to increase significantly.

CCBSSPORTS.com BATME

Bobby Doyle and Marcus Curry, RBs, Navy: Kettani isn't the only major loss from the Navy backfield. Leading rusher Shun White, who totaled 1,092 rushing yards and eight touchdowns, has also graduated. The Middies will be looking for a few slot backs to step up, and right now Curry and Doyle are locked into starting positions. Doyle is the only one of the duo with at least one college carry. The senior had his finest season in '08, but he had just 16 carries for 169 yards and one touchdown. Still, he averaged a teamhigh 10.6 yards per carry and could definitely bring some speed to the Navy rushing attack. Speaking of explosion, the 5-11, 200-pound Curry possesses plenty of game-changing ability. He is one of the fastest players on Navy and one of the biggest slot backs in recent history.

Golden Tate, WR, Notre Dame: Tate was one of the top Fantasy breakout players in '08. After he posted just six catches for 131 yards and one touchdown as a true freshman in '07, Tate led Notre Dame in receiving last season with 58 catches for 1,080 yards and 10 touchdowns. Tate have five 100-yard receiving games, including a school record for a bowl game with 177 yards and three touchdowns against Hawaii. Eighteen of his receptions went for at least 20 yards and 15 went for 30 or more. He might be just 5-11, 195 pounds, but Tate can certainly stretch the field. And it will be tough once again for opposing defenses to double-team Tate because of our next player, Michael Floyd.

Michael Floyd, WR, Notre Dame: Floyd came to Notre Dame last season as one of the nation's premier wide receiver recruits, and he was as good as advertised. The freshman All-American started 10 of 11 games, while establishing Notre Dame frosh records with 48 receptions for 719 yards and seven touchdowns. He did all that while missing $21 / 2$ games due to injury. Floyd had four 100-yard receiving games and could have done even more damage had he not been hobbled by injury late in the season. The 6-3, 215-pound Floyd is a perfect complement to Tate at wide receiver and should continue to improve as a sophomore.

Kyle Rudolph, TE, Notre Dame: Had Mike Ragone had not gone down with a seasonending knee injury last summer, Rudolph probably wouldn't have become the first freshman tight end in school history to start the opener and every game during his rookie season. But that's exactly how it played out for the 6-6, 258-pound tight end, and he didn't buckle under the pressure. Rudolph set freshmen school records for a tight end with 29 receptions for 340 yards. He also added two touchdowns. Ragone is healthy heading into '09, but Rudolph is still the starter and all that rapport he developed with Clausen last season will go a long way with him staying atop the depth chart.

Top Sleeper

Ali Villanueva, WR, Army: Villanueva is probably one of the most unique sleepers you are ever going to come across in Fantasy. How many wide receivers do you know that are 6-10, 300 pounds? Yeah, we didn't think so. One of Ellerson's first moves this spring as head coach was shifting Villanueva from the offensive line to wide receiver. He felt his size would be a great advantage since most defensive backs are under or just above 6feet, and Villanueva is surprisingly agile for a big man. The transition went pretty smoothly. He had three touchdown catches during spring scrimmages and finished the final scrimmage with two catches for 60 yards. While Villanueva might not have eye-popping numbers in a run-heavy offense, he could be a nice sleeper for deeper formats as a potential red zone target.

Top Bust

James Aldridge, RB, Notre Dame: Aldridge embarks on the '09 season as the most experienced back at Notre Dame. He has rushed for 962 yards and three touchdowns in 30 career games. Unfortunately, it has been an overly disappointing career for Aldridge, who was one of the premier recruits in the country in 2006. And it could get a lot worse for the senior in the fall. Since he was part of a crowded scene at tailback, Weis moved the 6-0, 225-pound bruiser to fullback. Aldridge has really played the role well of the "Rah-rah, whatever is best for the team" player, but he should be more of a blocker than rusher in the fall.

Top Freshman/Newcomer

Nick Tausch, K, Notre Dame: The Irish have an incumbent kicker in Brandon Walker, but his accuracy issues have been welldocumented during his career. That's why Notre Dame used a scholarship on Tausch in their latest recruiting class. The Plano, Texas native was one of the nation's top 10 kicker recruits in '09, as he earned All-Area and AllStar honors in high school. He connected on 9 of 15 field goals as a senior, with two conversions from 50 -plus yards (51, 53). Tausch has a powerful leg and could be asked to play as a freshman if Walker continues to struggle.

Mid-American Conference

By Jeff LippmanTell Jeff your opinion!

Chances are most Fantasy owners likely couldn't name more than one or two mascots associated with teams playing in the MidAmerican Conference. Most probably don't even know which FBS teams make up the tiny 13 -school league.

But if you won your respective Fantasy league last season we guarantee you had a few players wearing jersey's with the MAC patch proudly displayed on the shoulder.

Probably the top conference for Fantasy talent outside of the BCS schools -- it could give the ACC and Big Ten a run for their money -- some of the best Fantasy-point getters nationally call the MAC home.

Last season saw the MAC showcase two of the top 11 running backs in the nation as Ball State's MiQuale Lewis (No. 5) and Kent State's Julian Edelman (No. 11) rushed for 124 and 114 yards per game, respectively, with a combined 35 touchdowns. Two other top backs, James Starks of Buffalo and Dennis Kennedy of Akron, finished 15th and 16th nationally.

The top three quarterbacks in the conference, Western Michigan's Tim Hiller, Ball State's Nate Davis and Central Michigan's Dan LeFevour, all finished among the top 20 nationally in passing yards per game and combined to throw 83 touchdown passes.

Naaman Roosevelt of Buffalo and Jamarko Simmons of Western Michigan finished ninth and 10th, respectively, in the country in receiving yards per game and they probably weren't even the best pass catchers in the conference last season. That honor should rightly be bestowed upon Ball State's Dante Love, whose football career was tragically cut short when he suffered a spinal injury during a game on Sept. 20 of last season. He has since regained the use of his arms and legs and will lead a normal yet football-less life.

Love will obviously not be returning to the field for the Cardinals this season but the great thing about the MAC is that most of the aforementioned names are returning to their respective campuses. Ball State brings back Lewis and Buffalo Starks. While Davis left early for the NFL, both LeFevour and Hiller return for their senior seasons. Plus, Roosevelt is back along with a dearth of up and coming talent at wideout.

As far as depth goes, the MAC might rival the biggest of BCS conferences this season.

Top Players to Target

Eugene Jarvis, RB, Kent State: Health is the No. 1 key factor for Jarvis, who returns for his senior season. If he can just stay healthy for the Golden Flashes all season, Jarvis could find himself among the nation's elite running backs and a top Fantasy option in all leagues. Jarvis rushed for 1,669 yards and 10 touchdowns as a sophomore and only played in nine games last season due to injury problems. After rushing 25 times for 139 yards and a score at lowa State during the season's second game, Jarvis hurt himself and Julian Edelman became the top guy. All Edelman did was rack up 1,370 yards and 13 touchdowns and finish second in the conference and 11th in the nation with over 114 yards per game. He's gone now and Jarvis, who still rushed for 801 yards on only 165 carries with nine scores last season, is back to assume the starting role once again. Jarvis is also an excellent pass-catching threat out of the backfield. He's currently second among active FBS backs for career yards with 3,268 and we expect him to once again be among the league and the nation's best.

Dan LeFevour, QB, Central Michigan: If records are your thing than this Central Michigan senior should be the quarterback for you on Draft Day. LeFevour is mere breaths away from eclipsing a handful of MAC records. LeFevour, who threw for 2,784 yards and 21 touchdowns last season in an injury-plagued down year, well, for him anyway, needs just 383 total yards to become the MAC's all-time leader in total offense. The dual-threat needs 27 touchdown passes to top former Marshall QB Chad Pennington as the league's all-time leader. That might seem like a high number but LeFevour amassed 26 and 27 TD passes, respectively, in each of his first two seasons at the helm. Every bit as dangerous with his legs, despite an ankle injury that saw him play in only 11 games, LeFevour added 592 yards and six scores on the ground. His numbers last season might cause him to slip in stock a bit but make no mistake, after amassing 3,652 passing yards, 1,122 rushing yards and 46 total touchdowns in 2007, and with his favorite two receivers back, LeFevour is very much the MAC's No. 1 option and a top option across the country.

James Starks, RB, Buffalo: Starks could easily end up the top running back in the MAC, overtaking Ball State's Lewis. There is a reason that NFL scouts are salivating over the senior, who rushed for 1,333 yards and http://fantasynews.cbssports.com

16 touchdowns in 2008. That reason is his exciting combination of power and breakaway speed. Also a threat to catch the football, Starks made 52 receptions for 361 yards and another score and all this was accomplished while missing two games due to injury. Starks knows he's running in 2009 to become a top NFL draft pick next season and another 1,000-yard season would likely put him over the top. Quite like playing in a contract year in professional sports, we expect Starks to do everything in his power to have his best year on campus yet. The team will look to him early and often as they break in a new quarterback so defenses might key on Starks at first. Still, they won't be able to stop him from being one of, if not the best, back in the MAC.

Naaman Roosevelt, WR, Buffalo: We go from Starks to Buffalo's top pass-catching option in the 6 -foot, 187 -pound Roosevelt. This guy is electric and is easily the MAC's top returning receiver after finishing last season third in the entire nation with 104 catches and fourth in receiving yards with 1,402 . Roosevelt might just be the top receiver in the nation in his senior season. He's much stronger than he looks, is a great route runner and has high-end acceleration. These attributes helped him score 13 touchdowns last season and could lead to even bigger production in 2009. He gets better when the game gets bigger as evidenced by his three-touchdown performance in the Bulls' win over Ball State in the MAC Championship game. The only thing holding him back this year could be Buffalo's installment of a new signal caller in Zach Maynard with four-year starter Drew Willy gone. Still, if Maynard finds anyone it will be Roosevelt, who still figures to be among the nation's best in ' 09 .

Brandon West, RB, Western Michigan: West was not among the top 20 running backs in the nation like those listed higher in this preview. He did, however, finish top 50 with 1,026 yards and eight touchdowns last season. West's Fantasy value is lower because his value to Western Michigan is so high. Let us explain. West is not only the Broncos' tailback, he's also the team's top kick return specialist and one heck of a receiver as well, catching 38 passes for 280 yards and three more scores. The team feels that West has the ability to help out all over the field and will even put him behind center at times. Still, he's best at tailback and the Broncos are expected to let him focus a little more of his attention on that with the emergence of two-sport star Jamie Simpson and West's backup Aaron Winchester. West will still catch passes, run back kicks and be utilized in a plethora of ways, he just might see a few more carries to help his average of five yards each time he touches the football gain him even more yards this season.

Antonio Brown, WR, Central Michigan: Central Michigan has not one, but two highend Fantasy options at wide receiver with Brown and teammate Bryan Anderson. And with Dan LeFevour behind center, it is no surprise that his top weapons are some of the best in the nation in terms of production. Brown has been so good, the Chippewas can't keep him off the field and last season he became just the second player to ever earn all-conference honors at three separate positions when he was dubbed first-team AllMAC at receiver, kick and punt returner. Brown led the nation in punt return yardage with 20.5 per attempt and was fourth in allpurpose yards with 178.1. He caught at least 10 passes in four games and ultimately finished with 93 grabs for 998 yards and seven touchdowns. Brown also rushed 20 times for 116 yards. Great numbers, sure, but Brown was even better as a freshman when he racked up 1,003 receiving yards on a school-record 102 catches. Brown has been a step better than Anderson and therefore has slightly more Fantasy value as we expect him to eclipse the 1,000-yard mark again this year with a healthy LeFevour throwing him passes.

Tim Hiller, QB, Western Michigan: Last season, the top Fantasy quarterback in the MAC was not Dan LeFevour of Central Michigan, though it was a signal caller from a school in the same state. Hiller threw for 3,725 yards in 2008 and found the end zone 36 times. His 286.5 yards through the air per game ranked him 10th in the nation and his 26 completions per contest placed him fourth. After throwing for over 3,000 yards in 2007 as well, it seems Hiller is a lock to do it again as a senior. However, he comes with several issues that could hurt his value. Hiller suffered a torn ACL late in the season -- and played through it -- and had offseason surgery to correct the knee. While expected to be healthy, this immediately makes him a slight injury risk. Also, Hiller's Broncos travel to face three Big Ten teams and those defenses will make it hard for him to top his 2008 performance. We expect another great season but feel he's just a step below the level of LeFevour at this point.

Tyler Sheehan, QB, Bowling Green: Sheehan falls just shy of the Fantasy prominence of LeFevour and Hiller as the signal caller for the Falcons. Bowling Green simply doesn't throw the ball as much and that limits his production. Still, with a 66.8 completion percentage, when he does throw the ball, he completes the pass more often than not. Sheehan passed for 2,610 yards and 20 touchdowns last season and added a career-high 237 rushing yards and another seven scores. Those are valuable numbers but they were a drop off from the season prior when he amassed 3,264 yards through the air and 23 scores. That should tell you he has the ability to put up top Fantasy numbers but the Falcons have a new regime this season that is expected to focus a little more on the ground game. That said, new coach Dave Clawson knows he has a great talent in Sheehan and expects to let his QB air it out from time to time. He likely won't see LeFevour or Hiller's value, but he'll be a worthy Fantasy option in any league.

Alex Allen, RB, Akron: Last season Akron had on its roster the nation's 16 th best running back in senior Dennis Kennedy. Kennedy rushed for 1,321 yards and 17 touchdowns and averaged over 110 yards per contest for the Zips. Kennedy's time is over and that leaves a lot of offense to make up. Akron feels more than comfortable handing the ball to Allen, who rushed for just 152 yards and three scores last season before missing the final nine games with a significant hip injury. Allen totaled 414 yards and seven scores back in 2007 as a sophomore and was expected to do much bigger things before the injury last season. During the second game of the year, at Syracuse, he rushed 21 times for 103 yards and two touchdowns. Allen's only obstacle for a great season would be his health. If he can avoid getting hurt, he'll put up numbers comparable to what Kennedy amasses a season prior. Allen is a bit of a risk but the reward is likely too great to pass up in most Fantasy leagues.

Freddie Barnes, WR, Bowling Green: Barnes is by no means a sure thing in terms of Fantasy production this season. The 6foot, 210-pound senior caught 40 passes for 355 yards and no touchdowns last season. Yes, he's going to do better in 2009. Barnes suffered through an injury-plagued season that saw him play in just nine games. As a healthy sophomore in 2007, Barnes teamed with current quarterback Tyler Sheehan to grab 82 balls for 962 yards and nine scores. He's healthy again and Sheehan will still be throwing him passes. This time, however, it will be for new head coach Dave Clawson, the former offensive coordinator at Tennessee. Clawson is expected to even out the offense meaning a $50-50$ split of run-pass but he's already targeted Barnes as his main weapon. Barnes is extremely athletic and should be utilized in more ways than just catching the football. He could take the ball out of the backfield and even throw the occasional pass on trick plays. Expect Barnes to be among the best wideouts in the MAC this season as one of the top comeback performers in the country.

Top Sleeper

Robert Arnheim, WR, Western Michigan: Western Michigan has the pieces in place this season with top Fantasy options at quarterback (Tim Hiller) and running back (Brandon West). With Hiller's cannon for an arm and West's elusive ability out of the backfield, it stands to reason that the receivers should be able to find space to come up with some big yardage this season. But who will step up and make those grabs? Arnheim's career has taken an odd turn after a prodigious high school career had him as one of the top prep quarterbacks in the nation. Lack of size (6-foot-2, 195 pounds) saw him slip in his recruitment and eventually land with the Broncos. Arnheim redshirted 2007 with the hopes that he would compete with Hiller for the starting QB job in 2008. That did not happen and Hiller went on to put up monster production. Arnheim, cutting his losses, was moved to wide receiver. He caught just seven passes for 58 yards and a touchdown but showed ridiculous promise. That promise is on the verge of being realized after he was named the starting wideout in the Bronco spread offense. Add in his six-catch, 115-yard and a touchdown performance in the spring game and Hiller has himself that elusive target to find downfield.

scavith  Biggest Bust

MiQuale Lewis, RB, Ball State: Let's get one thing straight, the Cardinals' Lewis is going to be one of the top Fantasy backs in the MAC and perhaps the nation as well in 2009 after finishing fifth in the country last season with 1,736 yards and a school-record 22 touchdowns, while adding 35 catches for 325 yards. Still, one can't help but wonder just how much his Fantasy exploits were helped along by the team also possessing top offensive weapons in quarterback Nate Davis, wide receiver Dante Love and tight end Darius Hill. Love's season ended prematurely but the team had so many heralded weapons that it allowed Lewis to come mostly out of nowhere after playing only the first four games of his sophomore season before being lost to a torn ACL. In fact, the only season Lewis didn't find himself injured was last season when he played all 14 games. Davis, Love and Hill are gone and the Cardinals must instill new offensive weapons around Lewis. We believe he could have another amazing year as the focus of the offense but with more attention paid to him, injuries and Ball State's overall offense being less explosive could cost him being the top option he was in 2008.

Top Three Newcomers

Quincy Landingham, RB, Miami: When Landingham originally committed to play college football he envisioned himself running alongside the legend of Ron Dayne. The 6foot, 229-pound Landingham began his career at Wisconsin as a top-rated high school recruit but ultimately chose to leave the Badgers' crowded backfield for the RedHawks of Miami. New head coach Mike Haywood is happy to have the BCSconference talent on his roster and will give him the chance to run wild in one of the only MAC offenses to possess a strong groundcentered attack. Landingham could become the workhorse of the offense and has the ability to be a top back in the league. If he's given the opportunities and can stay healthy, Landingham could find himself as one of the most intriguing Fantasy sleepers in any conference. He'll be available; you just need to grab him at the right time.

Kelly Page, QB, Ball State: Page will not be to the Cardinals this season what Nate Davis was last year. Not even close, in fact. It would be tough for anyone to replace Davis' near 4,000 yards passing and 26 touchdowns compared to only eight interceptions. Still, as a redshirt freshman, long-time offensive coordinator and new head coach Stan Parrish feels completely comfortable putting the ball in the 6 -foot-3, 210-pound signal caller's hands. Not only is Davis gone, but Page will be without the two top pass catchers from the season prior as Dante Love is out of football and tight end Darius Hill graduated. Page gets MiQuale Lewis back at tailback and that will take lots of the pressure off as Lewis is expected to be among the best backs in the nation once again. Page is a dual-threat guy very much in the mold of Davis, who totaled 31 touchdowns as he added five on the ground last season, and when all is said and done he should contribute nicely to some Fantasy rosters in smaller leagues.

Matt Weller, K, Ohio: Judging from the lack of other players from Ohio making this Fantasy preview, one of the positions the team is expected to improve upon most this season is at kicker. Last season Barrett Way went 13 of 19 on field goals and missed three of his 35 extra-point attempts and finished with a team-high 71 points. He was just 2 of 6 from distances of 40 yards or greater so you could say he just had a weak foot. That won't be Weller's problem, however, as the redshirt freshman stands 6 -foot-4 and weighs 225 pounds. Looking much more athletic than most kickers, Weller has the ability to blast field goals from distance after hitting a long of 45 in high school. He proved his worth during the spring and will get the chance to start immediately this season. If Ohio can find any semblance of offense, Weller could become a valuable Fantasy option for smaller leagues.

Mountain West Conference

By Michael HurcombTell Michael your opinion!

I don't know why, but every time the Mountain West Conference comes up in conversation, I keep hearing in my head the chorus from an old song by Puff Daddy ... P. Diddy, Sean Combs or whatever the heck he is calling himself these days.
"We ain't, go-in nowhere, we ain't, goin nowhere. We can't be stopped now, cause this Bad Boy for life ."

Fine, criticize me for my taste in music or my lack of hip-hop swagger, but Mr. Diddy's lyrics should be enough inspiration for college football fans to give the Mountain West Conference its due respect.

The Utah Utes were the only undefeated team in college football last season, running the table at 13-0 and capping it with a stunning upset of Alabama in the Sugar Bowl. Not even the national champion Florida Gators could claim an unblemished season.

And what conference gave us Utah? Yup, you guessed it -- the Mountain West.

If there was a college football playoff system in place last season, the Mountain West would have been generously represented. Not only would Utah have been in the mix for the national title, but TCU and BYU would have been right there as well.

Granted, the Mountain West might have been a little top heavy in 2008, but it's a conference that ain't goin nowhere.

Teams like Air Force, Colorado State and UNLV all made great strides in '08 and could see continued development this season.

The Mountain West is also attracting coaching talent. New Mexico and Wyoming hired renowned offensive coordinators, Mike Locksley (Illinois) and Dave Christensen (Missouri) respectively, to help in the overhaul of their programs. And Brady Hoke left an up-and-coming Ball State program to help pull San Diego State from the college football cellar.

Most of these schools might be tucked away in the serene mountain landscape out west and far away from the East Coast-bias that seems to dominate college football, but this non-BCS conference is on a mission for national acclaim and can't be stopped now.

Top Players to Target

Max Hall, QB, BYU: One of the poster boys for the MWC in '08 was Hall, who was sixth in the nation in passing ( 304.4 yards per game). He finished seventh nationally with 3,957 yards, eighth in completions per game (25.4), ninth in total offense ( 313.23 ypg ) and 11th in passing efficiency (157.21). Hall completed 69.2 percent of his passes ( 330 for 447 ) while setting a MWC single-season record with 35 touchdown passes. He also rushed for four more scores. Losing top receivers Austin Collie (106 catches, 1,538 yards, 15 touchdowns) and Michael Reed (49 catches, 589 yards and two touchdowns) could be an issue. However, BYU has been ranked among the NCAA's top six passing offenses three of the last four years under head coach Bronco Mendenhall and Hall is a three-year starter in the fall, so it seems the odds are still in his favor to have a standout season.

Dennis Pitta, TE, BYU: One target Hall still has is Pitta, who has totaled 142 catches for 1,896 yards and 11 touchdowns since 2007. Pitta had a career-high 83 catches for 1,083 yards and six touchdowns last season, and did that while even being injured for the final three games. The All-American had three games with 10-plus catches and four games with at least 100 yards. His presence will be needed even more in '09 as BYU scours for some reliable outside receivers.

Harvey Unga, RB, BYU: Unga has been a load to bring down the last two seasons and has rebounded nicely since missing his true freshman season in 2006 due to injury. Unga has totaled 484 carries for 2,359 yards and 24 touchdowns in 26 career games. He also has 86 catches for 964 yards and eight touchdowns. He has posted consecutive 1,000-yard rushing seasons while earning freshman and sophomore All-American honors. He scampered for 1,132 yards and 11 touchdowns in '08 and did that while not even being 100 percent for the entire season.

Matt Asiata, RB, Utah: While quarterback Brian Johnson was arguably the face of the Utah program in '08, Asiata was equally important to the Utes' cause. Asiata was Utah's leading rusher with 146 carries for 707 yards and 12 touchdowns. He had 13 receptions for 111 yards and one score, and even passed for a pair of scores. Utah has what it calls the "Asiata Formation" -- which requires the running back to take a direct snap. That allowed Asiata to be creative with the ball in '08 and be effective in many different ways. With Utah breaking in a new quarterback, replacing their top three receivers and their second leading rusher -Darrell Mack -- it seems the "Asiata Formation" will become a staple in the Utah playbook.

Utah DST: With all this talk about offense, it's time to show the defense some love. Not only were the Utes proficient on offense in '08, but the defense was able to match the effort. Utah finished last season nationally ranked 11th in total defense ( 289.2 ypg ) and 12th in scoring defense (17.2 ppg). Not one opponent managed 30 points. Utah did lose all-conference defensive end Paul Kruger and all-conference cornerback Sean Smith, but seven starters and 28 lettermen are back on defense. Head coach Kyle Wittingham is a defensive coach by nature and always seems to have the Utes defense ready to go despite losing of quality personnel.

Andy Dalton, QB, TCU: It's going to be interesting to see what Dalton does as an encore in '09 after helping TCU set a singleseason school record for points scored (437) and touchdowns (56) in '08. Dalton didn't really settle in until late in the season after coming back from an injury that robbed him of two games. Dalton had two 300-yard passing games and 11 touchdown passes in the final six games. Dalton completed 59.3 percent of his passes for 2,242 yards, 11 touchdowns and five interceptions. He also rushed for 432 yards and eight touchdowns. Dalton is entering his third year as a starter in the fall. The experience and confidence boost at the end of the ' 08 season could go a long way in '09.

Joseph Turner, RB, TCU: When TCU needed a timely score last season, Turner wasn't far from the coach's mind. His biggest score was his final touchdown of the season. His 17-yard touchdown scamper with 8:51 in a bowl game against Boise State gave his team a 17-16 lead, which they wouldn't relinquish. Turner led TCU with 577 rushing yards and 11 touchdowns last season. Even with the loss of Aaron Brown ( 547 rushing yards), Turner isn't likely going to have to do it all by himself in the backfield. But he is going to be TCU's top tailback and likely goalline threat.

Jimmy Young, WR, TCU: Twelve yards. That's all Young needed in '08 to become the second receiver in school history to amass 1,000 yards in a season. While history eluded him, Young couldn't be disappointed with 59 catches, 988 yards and five touchdowns -- all team highs. He had four 100-yard receiving games and also averaged a team-high 16.7 yards per catch. His 59 catches were the fourth-best single-season total in school history. The on-field chemistry between Dalton and Young could be a big reason for TCU's success in '09.

Vincent Brown, WR, San Diego State: Brown has shown continued development since stepping on the San Diego State campus as a freshman in '07. He totaled 31 catches for 349 yards and two touchdowns as a frosh and followed that up with 64 catches for 631 yards and five touchdowns as a sophomore in '08. His best games were against Idaho (eight catches for 183 yards and three touchdowns) and UNLV (eight catches for 119 yards). The 6-0, 185-pound receiver could have an even better campaign in '09 now that Hoke is calling the plays. Brown had an outstanding spring game with eight catches for 126 yards and a 27-yard touchdown, and Hoke is just dying to see what the junior can do in a game that actually counts.

Ryan Wolfe, WR, UNLV: Wolfe has a very good chance to finish his career as the most decorated receiver in MWC history. He ranks fifth in MWC history for yards $(2,735)$ and is 900 away from breaking league's all-time record of 3,634 set by Colorado State's David Anderson. Wolfe also needs 54 catches as a senior to pass San Diego State's J. R. Tolver's MWC record of 262 catches. Wolfe already holds UNLV records in receptions (209) and receiving yards. His 10 career 100yard receiving games are also a Rebel record and ranks fourth in MWC history. Wolfe, who had a career-high 88 catches for 1,040 yards and six touchdowns in '08, is the first twotime first-team All-MWC receiver in school history and is a legit All-American candidate heading into '09.

Top Sleepers

Ryan Lindley, QB, San Diego State: Many analysts are eager to see Hoke work his magic on the redshirt sophomore Lindley. Hoke turned Nate Davis into one of the nation's best quarterbacks at Ball State and many feel he could put Lindley on the map as well. The 6-3, $205-$ pound gunslinger threw the ball 427 times in ' 08 but completed just 56.7 percent of his passes. However, he did have four games with 300 or more passing yards, including a career-high 433 yards against Idaho. Former Auburn offensive coordinator Al Borges is also helping in Lindley's development, so the pieces are in place for him to succeed.

Sausan Shakerin, RB, Utah: The Utes might have lost a lot of quality offensive talent following their undefeated season, but no one is going to weep for their cause since Utah has plenty of capable bodies waiting in the wings, like Shakerin. The 6-2, 225-pounder is raring to go in '09 after redshirting as a true freshman last season. For being a big back, he has deceptive speed (4.49 40). The former Mr. Football in Utah scored twice during the spring game and averaged 6.1 yards per game. "Shak" could be an excellent complement to Asiata in the Utah backfield.

Darius Terry, RB, Wyoming: We haven't talked a lot of Wyoming's new spread offense under Christensen, but it seems Terry is going to be a key figure to the Cowboys' rebirth. Christensen said after spring practice that "Terry has a chance to be a good back in our system." That should give Fantasy owners goosebumps after what Christensen did with the likes of Tony Temple and Derrick Washington at Missouri. Terry was used heavily in the spring by Christensen in all situations, including some "Wildcat" formations, so the junior appears primed for his breakout season following the graduations of Devin Moore and Wynel Seldon, two of the most productive backs in school history.

Top Busts

TCU DST: The Horned Frogs finished the '08 season as the nation's top-rated defense, allowing just 217.8 yards per game. They allowed just one opponent to score more than 16 points and held seven to one touchdown or less. The Horned Frogs had the second best scoring defense (11.3 ppg) behind USC. While All-American Jerry Hughes opted to return to school for his senior season, TCU still lost seven starters and 10 lettermen. We don't doubt coach Gary Patterson's coaching abilities. TCU always seems to have a dominant defense, but we are just cautioning Fantasy owners that the numbers could be a bit down in ' 09 with so much turnover.

Rashaun Greer and Dion Morton, WRs, Colorado State: I'm playing with fire here, but my confidence in the Colorado State passing game is a bit down since head coach Steve Fairchild wasn't exactly raving about his quarterback situation post-spring practice. Fairchild was in a similar situation in his first year before Billy Farris nearly passed for 3,000 yards. His favorite targets were Greer and Morton. The duo combined for 114 catches, 1,973 yards and 13 touchdowns last season. The quarterback situation is a bit more unstable heading into fall camp as the competition is still open between Grant Stucker, Jon Eastman, Klay Kubiak and Nico Ranieri. Fairchild wasn't pleased with any of his quarterbacks this spring, and it even brought up the question whether or not converted wide receiver T.J. Borcky would have to re-enter the quarterback race. It seems the running game could be the focal part of the CSU offense in '09.

Top Freshmen/Newcomers

Leonard Mason, RB, Colorado State: The Rams not only have a quarterback controversy, but the entire backfield is a mess after losing 1,400-yard rusher Gartrell Johnson. It was likely one of the main reasons Mason signed with Colorado State in '09. The junior college transfer enrolled early for spring practice and showed the same bigplay potential that made him one of the mostcoveted junior college backs on the market. He averaged 10.2 yards per carry during the spring and could be just what the Rams need to forget about Johnson.

Mitch Mathews, WR, BYU: We have already diagnosed the BYU passing game needs a bit of a makeover after losing its top two receivers. While it's likely McKay Jacobson and O'Neill Chambers pick up the slack, the opportunity is certainly there for some newcomers to make a splash. Mathews has the frame (6-5, 195 pounds) to be a top target for Max Hall and is also quite athletic. He totaled 26 catches for 475 yards and seven touchdowns in only five games as a senior. He missed the first five with a broken leg. Mathews was also a decorated baseball player growing up in Oregon.

Waymon James, RB, TCU: The Horned Frogs might not need a lot of immediate help in the backfield with the return of Joseph Turner and Ryan Christian, but James might be too good to keep on the sidelines. The 58 , 203-pound back was widely considered one of the top 15 running back recruits in the country. That's quite a compliment coming from prospect-laden Texas. He ran for 1,939 yards and 26 touchdowns as a senior at Sherman High and averaged a whopping 11.3 yards per carry. He ran for at least 1,000 yards and 14 touchdowns in each of his three seasons on the varsity squad and holds Sherman career records for rushing yards $(4,732)$, total yards $(5,305)$, rushing touchdowns (54) and total touchdowns (63).

Pac-10 Conference

By Michael HurcombTell Michael your opinion!

Life for USC head coach Pete Carroll has been pretty sweet over the last decade.

After failing to make it as a head coach in the NFL, Carroll returned to the college game in 2001 as the Trojans head coach. It was his first college coaching gig since leaving Pacific in 1984 and his first run as a college head coach.

Carroll took over a program that was starting to lose its prestige and appeared headed for the college football doldrums. Following a 6-6 season in 2001, it didn't look as though Carroll was ready to resurrect the USC program, but a year later the Trojans went 11-2 and beat lowa in the Orange Bowl. It started a run of seven straight BCS bowl appearances for the Trojans, and USC returned to its rightful position atop the college football universe.

Still, one of the more lasting images during Carroll's tenure at USC was his actions during quarterback Mark Sanchez's press conference announcing his intentions to leave school early. After saying a few uninspiring words, Carroll turned left of the lectern, put his head down, quickly shook Sanchez's hand and stormed out of the room.

Since that day everyone from Trojan fans to college football analysts to Fantasy players have been waiting anxiously to see who will be Sanchez's successor.

The chain of quarterbacks at USC has been pretty impressive under Carroll. From Carson Palmer to Matt Leinart to John David Booty to Sanchez. Following the USC quarterback carousel is as Hollywood as you are going to find in college football.

Carroll entered spring practice with no intention of naming a starting quarterback before fall drills, but that all changed when redshirt sophomore Aaron Corp took hold of the job. Corp went 13 practices during the spring without throwing an interception and his ability to prevent the turnover gave Carroll some hope that USC could still compete for the national title in 2009.

Corp might start the season under center for the Trojans, but might not end it there. Among another top-ranked recruiting class for USC in '09 was quarterback Matt Barkley, who is being lauded as a future No. 1 NFL draft pick. His presence could constantly have Corp looking over his shoulder and provide so much pressure that the young signal caller eventually gives way to the promising star.

It's easy to see the Fantasy potential that comes with drafting a USC quarterback. The track record speaks for itself. However, this is no slam-dunk call like in past seasons.

Maybe it's time to follow in Carroll's footsteps and stage our own protest because Sanchez's decision has its ramifications all the way down to the Fantasy world.

Players to Target

Nic Grigsby, RB, Arizona: While all of the attention in recent seasons has been on the Arizona passing game and quarterback Willie Tuitama, the focus can now shift to the running game as the Wildcats work with a new starting quarterback. The position is well stocked with Grigsby and Keola Antolin. While Antolin came on late during his freshman season in 2008, Grigsby was still the star in the backfield. He rushed for a career-best 1,153 yards and 13 touchdowns as a sophomore. He had five 100-yard rushing games and managed to break the 1,000-yard barrier despite being in coach Mike Stoops' doghouse for a few games in the middle of the season.

Rob Gronkowski, TE, Arizona: Whether it is Matt Scott or Nick Foles or a combination of the duo at quarterback for Arizona in 2009, they will have a big target to throw to in the 66, 270 -pounder Gronkowski. The AllAmerican candidate has been a smash hit since his freshman season in 2007. Gronkowski missed the first three games of the 2008 season with mono, but once he stepped on the gridiron he was electrifying. Gronkowski debuted against UCLA with two touchdowns and followed that up with a fivecatch, 109-yard, three-touchdown performance against Washington. He set career highs across the board in receptions (47), yards (672) and touchdowns (10). Gronkowski has missed five games in his first two seasons, but that's still not enough to scare off Fantasy owners. He is one of the few elite players at a very thin Fantasy position.

Toby Gerhart, RB, Stanford: Talk about your comeback player of the year. Gerhart only appeared in one game during the 2007 season because of a torn ACL and had a long journey back to the gridiron in '08. Most players typically struggle coming off a severe knee injury like Gerhart suffered, but the 6-1, 237-pound bowling ball seemed to defy all odds. He led Stanford with 210 carries, 1,136 rushing yards, 15 touchdowns and 94.7 rushing yards per game (29th in the nation). Gerhart had eight 100 -yard rushing games last season and looked fully recovered from the knee injury. His best game was a 132yard, four-touchdown effort against Washington State. Gerhart chose to postpone his baseball career to return for his senior season in '09 and get one last chance to run over the Pac-10 opposition.

Jahvid Best, RB, California: The recent pedigree of Cal running backs has been as successful as that of the USC quarterbacks, from J.J. Arrington to Marshawn Lynch to Justin Forsett. All were 1,000-yard backs under coach Jeff Tedford and the pressure was on Best to continue the trend in '08. Outside of some injury issues, Best stepped up to the challenge. He rushed for 1,580 yards and 15 touchdowns, while adding another 246 yards and one touchdown through the air. Best finished up the '08 season on a high note with four straight 100yard games. That stretch included a 201-yard performance against Stanford and 311-yard outing the following week at Washington. Shane Vereen will continue to be a complement in the backfield, but Best is being talked about as a top Heisman candidate.

Jacquizz Rodgers, RB, Oregon State: How could a guy nicknamed "Mr. Touchdown" not be as good as his moniker? The 5-7, 193pound Rodgers dazzled us all as a freshman in '08 and made the Texas schools pay for letting the state's all-time leading prep touchdown maker (136) out of their backyard. Rodgers went on to win Pac-10 Offensive Player of the Year honors after rushing for 1,253 yards and 11 touchdowns in 11 games. He missed the final two games with a shoulder injury but is expected to be ready for fall camp. Rodgers also had 29 catches for 247 yards and one touchdown and seven games with 100-plus total yards last season. He is as electrifying a player as you are going to find on the college gridiron.

James Rodgers, WR, Oregon State: It's not surprising that Jacquizz Rodgers had such a successful freshman season in Corvallis, Ore., because we just need to look at big brother James and realize the good football lineage Quizz comes from. James has been a multi-dimensional threat for the Beavers since he arrived one year ahead of his brother in 2007. Rodgers was second on the team in ' 08 with 408 rushing yards and five touchdowns. He was also third on the team with 51 catches for 607 yards and four scores. Oregon State is without their top two receivers from ' 08 -- Sammie Stroughter ( 1,040 yards) and Shane Morales (743) -- so Rodgers is going to need to put his experience to good use to keep Oregon State on the national radar.

USC DST: Usually when a team returns only three full-time starters on defense there is more cause for concern than comfort. But not when it comes to USC. Losing linebackers like Rey Maualuga, Brian Cushing, Kaluka Maiava and Clay Matthews will take its toll, but USC has a depth chart full of high school All-Americans just waiting for their chance to step up. USC put on quite a show defensively in '08. They shut out opponents three times and no one scored more than 27 points in 13 games. They had the nation's top scoring defense ( 9.0 ppg ) and second total defense (221.77 ypg). They were also first against the pass (134.38 ypg) and fifth against the run (87.38 ypg). Safety Taylor Mays is the Trojans' top returning defender, but keep an eye on rising defensive end Everson Griffin. He is tough to stop coming off the edge. It helps the USC DST unit that they also have playmakers on special teams like Joe McKnight, Ronald Johnson, C.J. Gable and Stafon Johnson.

Damian Williams, WR, USC: Williams could also be put in the potential bust category for '09 since the USC quarterback situation might be a little unstable, but even if that is the case, the Trojans are still going to run plays to try and get the ball in his hands. The Arkansas transfer was finally eligible to play in '08 after sitting out a season. His arrival was worth the wait. Williams debuted with seven catches for 91 yards against Virginia and posted two touchdowns a week later against Ohio State. Williams finished with a team-high 58 catches for 869 yards and was second with nine touchdowns. Williams accomplished all this without even one 100yard outing. The loss of receiver Patrick Turner (10 touchdowns) means Williams will be even that more important to the Trojans' passing game in '09.

Jake Locker, QB, Washington: Locker couldn't avoid the injury bug in '08 and played in only four games before suffering a seasonending thumb injury. It was a real shame since Locker was one of the nation's up-andcoming quarterbacks after winning Pac-10

Freshman of the Year in '07. Locker threw for just 512 yards and one touchdown, while rushing for 180 yards and three scores last season. He had 2,062 passing yards, 986 rushing yards and 27 touchdowns (14 passing) as a freshman. Since Locker last played, Tyrone Willingham has been replaced by Steve Sarkisian as Washington head coach. Sarkisian knows a thing or two about developing quarterbacks coming from USC, where he was the offensive coordinator. Locker adjusted pretty well to Sarkisian's pro-style offense in the spring. He completed 16-of-18 passes for 200 yards and two touchdowns in the spring game. Locker also ran for a score. While he might not have to run as much under Sarkisian, the coach is still going to put the ball in Locker's hands so he can make plays.

D'Andre Goodwin, WR, Washington: Goodwin was one of the few bright spots in what was a miserable 0-12 campaign for Washington in '08. Goodwin hauled in 60 passes, which was good for fourth in the Pac10. He had 692 receiving yards but found the end zone just once. Sarkisian will look to change that in the fall. Even though Goodwin, who averaged five catches per game last season but missed most of spring drills with a hamstring issue, Sarkisian still listed him as a starter heading into the fall. The junior receiver should have a nice season in '09 barring injury.

Jeremiah Masoli, QB, Oregon: Even with injury-after-injury picking off Oregon quarterbacks last season, it ended up not being such a bad proposition for the Ducks. They found a star quarterback in Masoli, who began the season fifth on the depth chart. He set a new school rushing record for a quarterback with 718 yards and 10 touchdowns. He also threw for 1,744 yards and 13 touchdowns. Masoli definitely improved as the season went on and finished with 830 passing yards, 248 rushing yards and 13 touchdowns (seven rushing) in the last three games of the season. Offensive coordinator Chip Kelly takes over as Oregon head coach in 2009 and he will likely continue to lean on the dual-threat Masoli.

LeGarrette Blount, RB, Oregon: Blount was everything and then some for the Ducks in '08 after being a highly-touted junior college transfer. Blount paired with Jeremiah Johnson and Masoli to form one of the most feared rushing attacks in college. The trio combined for 2,921 yards and 40 rushing touchdowns. Blount had just four 100-yard rushing games, but still managed to amass 1,002 yards. He also had six multi-touchdown games on his way to a team-high 17 rushing touchdowns. Blount is a bruising back at 6-2, 240 pounds but with deceptive speed. With the loss of Johnson, Blount now becomes the primary focus in the running game.

Ed Dickson, TE, Oregon: All Dickson has done since moving from defensive end to tight end is make plays for the Ducks. He has 58 catches for 961 yards and six touchdowns the last two seasons. Dickson totaled 35 catches for 508 yards and three touchdowns in 2008. He had his first 100-yard game last season and also managed 70 or more yards five times. The only knock against Dickson is that he can sometimes fade in-and-out with his production. However, Oregon lost two of their best receivers from '08 -- Terrence Scott and Jaison Williams -- so Dickson's presence might be needed more than ever as a senior.

Top Sleepers

Andrew Luck, QB, Stanford: It seems the Cardinal are ready to try their Luck at quarterback. OK, sorry for the bad pun, but the change at quarterback can't really hurt Stanford after going 5-7 in '08. Tavita Pritchard is still on campus and no one will forget he was under center when Stanford upset USC in '07, but he hasn't been able to take the Cardinal to the next level. The redshirt freshman Luck could be the guy that helps get Stanford coach Jim Harbaugh to finally break the .500 win barrier. Luck completed 18 -of- 25 passes for 352 yards and five touchdowns in the team's spring game and showed a ton of big-play potential. It will probably be Luck's job to lose in fall camp.

Darrell Catchings, WR, Oregon State: Catchings probably should have taken a redshirt season in '08 when former AllAmerican Sammie Stroughter returned to campus. Catchings stepped up as a freshman in ' 07 for the Beavers when Stroughter was away from the team for personal reasons. He totaled 33 receptions for 386 yards. He didn't even come close to those totals in a backup role in '08. He amassed just seven catches for 95 yards, while Stroughter returned to his All-American form totaling 70 catches for 1,040 yards and seven touchdowns. Stroughter is in the NFL, so Catchings is expected to slide back into a starting role. The potential for him to have a big season is there.

Biggest Bust

Joe McKnight, RB, USC: McKnight has been followed by a huge cloud of expectations since he was tabbed as the next Reggie Bush entering his freshman season at USC in '07. He showed the same kind of game-changing ability Bush did during his tenure with the Trojans, but the numbers have yet to match up for McKnight. While he did average 7.4 yards per carry last season, McKnight rushed for just 659 yards and two scores. He also had 21 catches for 193 yards and one score. They were pretty much the same numbers he posted as a freshman. McKnight's biggest issue is a stockpile of former high school All-Americans in the USC backfield. McKnight can't be a feature back since Stafon Johnson, C.J. Gable, Marc Tyler, Stanley Havili, etc., are also vying for carries. It doesn't help McKnight's case that he missed most of spring with a toe injury that might follow him into the fall. McKnight is as good as the hype suggests, but his numbers might not add up for Fantasy owners.

Top Freshmen/Newcomers

Randall Carroll, WR, UCLA: Carroll had been committed to USC since the fall of his junior year in high school and stayed with the Trojans up until the final weeks of the recruiting process. The Los Angeles Cathedral product then opted to take his game across town to UCLA and help Rick Neuheisel resurrect the Bruins program. The $5-11$, 185-pound receiver could be immediately thrust into action as UCLA needs playmakers to help improve an offense that averaged just 200.5 passing yards per game (73rd) last season. The high school AllAmerican is one of the nation's top wide receiver recruits and his blazing speed is what separates him from the pack. He had 31 receptions for 564 yards and four touchdowns as a senior, while adding 73 carries for 543 yards and two scores.

Jemari Roberts, WR, Stanford: If you thought UCLA's passing game was in bad shape -- take a look at Stanford. They produced just 152.2 passing yards per game (103rd) last season and don't have many playmakers at wide receiver. That's a big reason why Roberts could probably step in as a freshman and help infuse some energy in the passing game. The 6-3, 205-pound receiver hails from Long Beach (Calif.) Wilson High. He totaled 1,108 all-purpose yards and nine touchdowns as a senior, while totaling 2,700 all-purpose yards and 21 touchdowns in his varsity career. He was widely considered a four-star prospect and top 20 receiver coming of high school. He has the size and athleticism to make an impact as a freshman.

Tyrece Gaines, WR, Oregon: Even before Mike Bellotti stepped down as Oregon head coach, he was glad to have signed Gaines, a junior college transfer from Butler Community College (Kan.). Bellotti definitely knew the challenge that was ahead for Oregon after losing two of their best receivers -- Terrence Scott and Jaison Williams. When Gaines finally signed weeks after Signing Day, Bellotti said, "He will be a fine addition to our receiving corps and eases our concerns regarding our depth at that position with the loss of two senior starters." The 6-3, 204pound Gaines was one of the most soughtafter junior college recruits in '09. He made 28 receptions for 490 yards and a team-high nine touchdowns in '08 for Butler CC. He caught 23 balls for 424 yards and four scores as a freshman in '07. The fact he already has college experience should help with his transition to the FBS level.

Southeastern Conference

By Michael HurcombTell Michael your opinion!

The SEC might as well buy the rights to the song We are the Champions (as made popular by the band Queen) with the rate they are bringing home college football national championships.

The University of Florida won its third national championship when they beat Oklahoma 2414 in January. It was the Gators second title in three seasons and the SEC's third straight national championship, as LSU beat Ohio State for the 2007 crown.

The Tim Tebow love affair continued in 2008 and it will undoubtedly continue this season. Whether the Gators can repeat will be a big storyline this fall, but not the only one coming out of the SEC.

What's Georgia going to do at quarterback and running back sans No. 1 overall pick Matthew Stafford and fellow first-rounder Knowshon Moreno?

Can Nick Saban keep the gravy train going at Alabama and make his team forget about their late-season collapse in '08?

Is LSU ready to contend again after a down season by its lofty standards? Will the arrival of former Tennessee defensive coordinator John Chavis bring the bite back to the Bayou Bengals' defense?

Will the Ol' Ball Coach ever find the magic of the Run N' Gun offense at South Carolina?

How will first-year head coaches Lane Kiffin (Tennessee), Dan Mullen (Mississippi State) and Gene Chizik (Auburn) hold up?

These are just a few of the questions for the think tank.

We'll miss the likes of Moreno, Alabama running back Glen Coffee, Florida wide receiver Percy Harvin, LSU kicker Colt David and South Carolina wide receiver Kenny McKinley in Fantasy College Football circles, but the cupboard is not bare as we steamroll into 2009.

There is still plenty of top talent returning, and what was lost was replenished when the SEC coaches hit the recruiting trail harder than a Mike Tyson right hook.

Top Players to Target

Caleb King, RB, Georgia: Let's start with the guy expected to replace Moreno in UGA's backfield. A lot of folks have been riding King after having a disappointing spring camp and it seems the only supporter he has is head coach Mark Richt, which is the only person the 5-11, 210-pound back has to impress. King spent his redshirt freshman season as Moreno's backup. He finished second on the team with 247 rushing yards and one touchdown. Moreno was a 1,000-yard rusher in each of the last two seasons and King is pretty much built in the same mold as his predecessor. He will be feeling the heat from Richard Samuel and Carlton Thomas, but Richt feels King will eventually shine as Georgia's go-to-back.
A.J. Green, WR, Georgia: As we talked about earlier, Georgia is having a complete makeover in their backfield as Stafford has vacated the quarterback position. But Joe Cox has been kicking around the program since 2005 and should be able to step in as a fifth-year senior with little dropoff. That's why we feel Green is still a player to target in Fantasy. Green came to UGA in 2008 as one of the nation's elite recruits and did nothing to disappoint. He was a first-team All-SEC member and earned the coaches vote as SEC Freshman of the Year. He totaled 56 catches for 963 yards and eight touchdowns. With Mohamed Massaquoi (58 catches, 920 yards, eight touchdowns in '08) out of the picture, Green is expected to be Bulldogs' top receiver. He has the size (6-4, 207 pounds) and athleticism to dominate the competition.

Jeffery Demps, RB, Florida: Not many people were expecting to see Demps on the field as a true freshman in '08 since Florida was pretty loaded in the backfield. Harvin was coming back, Chris Rainey was an emerging threat coming off a redshirt season, the reliable Kestahn Moore was still hanging around and USC transfer Emmanuel Moody was finally eligible. But Demps got on the field late in the opener against Hawaii, showed off his world-class speed by rushing for 76 yards and one touchdown on two carries and the rest is now history. Head coach Urban Meyer took off Demps' redshirt season and didn't hesitate using him in Florida's run to the national title. Demps averaged 7.8 yards per carry while racking up 605 rushing yards and seven touchdowns. He also had 15 catches for 141 yards and one touchdown. The UF backfield is still crowded headed in '09 and Tebow will continue to steal carries from the quarterback position, but Meyer has said he intends to use Demps like Harvin and try to put the ball in his hands anyway possible.

Mark Ingram, RB, Alabama: Much like Demps, Ingram was expected to get lost in the running back mix at Alabama as a true freshman in '08 since the Crimson Tide returned plenty of capable bodies in Terry Grant, Glen Coffee and Roy Upchurch. But Saban found a role Ingram. He used him as a perfect complement to Coffee, who rushed for 1,383 yards and 10 touchdowns. Ingram finished second on the team with 728 rushing yards and topped Coffee with 12 rushing scores. The question is will Ingram assume the role as Alabama's top running back or fall victim to the likes of Roy Upchurch or top recruit Trent Richardson?

Ryan Mallett, QB, Arkansas: Give Arkansas head coach Bobby Petrino credit. He didn't have a lot of high-end talent at quarterback in ' 08 with brothers Casey and Nathan Dick, but he still managed to produce the nation's 23 rd best passing offense ( 259.6 ypg ). Now that Petrino has a potential pro prospect in Mallett, the Arkansas' passing game might go to the next level in '09. Mallett, a Michigan transfer, is a physical presence at 6-6, 255 pounds, and has a rocket arm. He also showed a nice touch during the spring game as he threw for two touchdowns and 233 yards. Petrino has said Tyler Wilson is also still in the picture at quarterback, but many analysts have already pegged Mallett as SEC Newcomer of the Year. As long as he can stay healthy, Mallett will get the chance to showcase his passing skills.

Michael Smith, RB, Arkansas: The Razorbacks averaged just 113.5 rushing yards per game (97th) in '08, and while Petrino might not exactly rely heavily on the run game, that didn't stop Smith from becoming a 1,000-yard rusher. His production did tail off late in the season as he battled injury, but he still managed 207 carries for 1,072 yards and eight touchdowns. He also had 32 receptions for 298 yards and two scores. Smith sat out spring practice with a bum hamstring but should be ready in the fall. Arkansas has some emerging talent in USC transfer Broderick Green and De'Anthony Curtis, but as long as Smith is healthy, he is going to be Arkansas' workhorse again.
D.J. Williams, TE, Arkansas: As is the case in the pro version of Fantasy Football, tight end is one position that is always a crapshoot. You have the elite players, which is just a handful, and then the rest of the field, which you usually punt on if you miss out on the bumper crop. The Fantasy College Football game is no different, and that's why you want Williams near the top of your draft board. When Petrino came to Arkansas last season, no one was more excited than Williams since the tight end is featured prominently in Petrino's passing offense. Therefore, it was no shock to see Williams lead Arkansas with 61 receptions for 723 yards and three touchdowns. He had three 100-yard games and eight games with at least five receptions. He did all that with Casey Dick, an average quarterback, mostly slinging passes to him. With Mallett set to take over, it wouldn't surprise us if Williams ends up with more yards and touchdowns in '09.

Jevan Snead, QB, Ole Miss: Rebels coach Houston Nutt seriously needs to consider sending former Ole Miss coach Ed Oregeron a thank you card. Thanks to Oregeron's relentless recruiting efforts, Nutt took over a program in ' 08 with a roster filled with emerging talent, including Snead. Oregeron landed Snead as part of his '07 recruiting class when the dual-threat quarterback left Texas after he could no longer be Colt McCoy's towel boy. It seems as though Snead was always destined to be a starter in the SEC. He originally committed to Florida out of high school, but when Tebow committed in the same class, Snead bolted for Texas. Snead had no trouble learning Nutt's offense, and he quickly became one of the SEC's top gunslingers in '08. He completed 184 of 327 passes for 2,762 yards and totaled 29 touchdowns (three rushing). He ranked second in the SEC in touchdown passes (26), third in passing average (212.5 ypg), third in pass efficiency (145.5) and fourth in total offense ( 217.1 ypg ). He really got better as the season went on, throwing two or more touchdowns in his final six games. Snead is being heavily talked about in the preseason Heisman chatter.

Dexter McCluster, WR, Ole Miss: At Arkansas, Nutt called it the "Wild Hog" formation. At Ole Miss, he switched it to the "Wild Rebel." But they pretty much preach the same principle -- get the ball in your top player's hands. Enter McCluster. Nutt quickly identified the $5-8$, 165-pound McCluster as the guy who would be the feature player in the "Wild Rebel," similar to how Oakland Raiders running back Darren McFadden made the "Wild Hog" his own at Arkansas. McCluster rushed for 655 yards and six touchdowns, while adding 44 catches for 625 yards and one touchdown last season. It was his most successful college season after two injury-plagued years to begin his career. With Snead only expected to improve as a second-year starting quarterback in '09, that should only mean more good things to come for McCluster.

Randall Cobb, WR, Kentucky: Cobb is arguably the SEC's most versatile athlete. He was a middle-of-the road prospect in the '08 recruiting class who blossomed into a do-it-all player for the Wildcats as a true freshman. He took snaps at quarterback, lined up at wide receiver and dashed for big gains out of the backfield. In all, Cobb threw for 542 yards, rushed for 316 yards and posted 197 yards receiving. He also totaled 11 touchdowns (seven rushing, two receiving, two passing). With head coach Rich Brooks looking to bring some stability to the quarterback position in '09, he has said the 511, 188-pound Cobb will primarily spend his time at wide receiver. Still, that doesn't mean he won't be used in a bevy of situations since he is pretty much Kentucky's top playmaker.

Charles Scott, RB, LSU: An 8-5 season is not what LSU pictured in '08 after winning the national championship the year before, but they did take some major losses, including at running back, as Jacob Hester packed his bags for the NFL. But the rushing game couldn't be blamed for LSU's woes last season since Scott was downright sensational. Scott plastered his name all over the LSU record books in his first season as a full-time starter. He became just the 12th running back in LSU's storied history to rush for 1,000 yards $(1,174)$ and also led the SEC with 18 rushing touchdowns. He averaged 5.4 yards per carry, which tied for the thirdhighest average in LSU history for running backs with at least 200 carries. The accomplishments go on-and-on. But you get the picture. LSU should lean heavily on Scott again in '09, while throwing some bones to Keiland Williams and Richard Murphy.

Brandon LaFell, WR, LSU: LaFell really doesn't get the credit he deserves, but he has been pretty darn reliable for the Tigers and has developed into a top SEC receiver. He has led LSU in receiving since ' 07 and has a reception in 28 straight games. LaFell by far had his best season in '08 with 63 receptions for 929 yards and eight touchdowns. He was a first-team All-SEC performer, was second in the SEC with 71.5 receiving yards per game and third in the conference with 4.8 receptions per game. The Tigers will continue to find ways to get the ball to LaFell since the receiving corps is a little green following the graduation of Demetrius Byrd.

Anthony Dixon, RB, Mississippi State: Dixon is a holdover from the Sylvester Croom era, but head coach Dan Mullen isn't going to hold that against the senior tailback. Dixon has a wealth of experience running the football in the SEC and Mullen will look to utilize that in the fall. Dixon heads into '09 with 2,603 rushing yards, 326 receiving yards and 36 touchdowns in his career. He rushed for a team-high 869 yards and seven touchdowns in '08. He dropped 20 pounds in the offseason, and Mullen liked Dixon's work ethic so much that he used the 6-1 athlete in a myriad of formations during the spring. Dixon is going to get his touches as he tries to end his college career with a bang and show the scouts he belongs in the NFL.

Top Sleeper

Mario Fannin, RB, Auburn: The Tigers tried to install a spread offense last season under offensive guru Tony Franklin. But when former head coach Tommy Tuberville tried to micromanage his offensive coordinator, the experiment blew up and both coaches were eventually out of a job. Gene Chizik has since been hired as head coach and lured Gus Malzahn away from Tulsa, where he led one of the nation's top offenses the last two seasons. Auburn is going back to a spread offense in '09, but Chizik is going to let Malzahn do his own thing. That could be good news for Fantasy owners since Auburn has a lot of quality talent, including Fannin. The 5-11, 226-pounder is arguably Auburn's top athlete and has a pretty good arm as well since he was a quarterback in high school. The Tigers are looking to feature Fannin's talents in the fall, and we got a glimpse of it during the spring game when he totaled 22 rushing yards, 71 receiving yards and a touchdown. Fantasy owners should pay close attention to the Auburn situation in '09 since it could be worth your while.

Biggest Bust

Julio Jones, WR, Alabama: Jones was much like Georgia's Green in '08. He came to Alabama as one of the nation's top recruits and was expected to pay immediate dividends. The 6-4, 210-pound receiver did just that. He led Alabama with 58 catches for 924 yards and four touchdowns. It only seems as though Jones is going to get better, but we have some concerns heading into '09. Alabama has to break in a new quarterback after the graduation of John Parker Wilson. It's expected to be Greg McElroy, but Saban might opt to go with redshirt freshman Star Jackson or true freshman A.J. McCarron. Regardless, experience is going to be a major concern. Therefore, Saban might opt to lean a bit more on the running game until his new quarterback settles in. While Jones will still be the feature receiver at Alabama, the opposition knows that as well. They could easily double team the lanky Jones until another receiving threat emerges. It seems as though Jones is going to have to earn his numbers in the fall.

Top Three Freshmen

Jarvis Giles, RB, South Carolina: Steve Spurrier landed a recruiting coup when Phil Fulmer was fired at Tennessee. Giles, a fourstar recruit from Tampa, then reneged on his commitment to the Vols and signed on the dotted line with the Gamecocks. The 5-11, 183-pound back had no visions of sitting on the sidelines as a freshman in '09, so he enrolled early and went through spring drills. He put on quite a show as South Carolina has a heated race going on to replace '08 leading rusher Mike Davis. Giles carried the ball 12 times for a team-high 114 yards and two touchdowns during SC's spring game. He showed the kind of skill to be an impact back. Now, he just needs to stay the course and beat out Brian Maddox, Eric Baker and Kenny Miles for the starting job.

Bryce Brown, RB, Tennessee: One day the real story on how Lane Kiffin got Brown to back out of his commitment from Miami (Fla.) and sign with Tennessee will emerge, but as we head into the fall the true freshman could be a serious player in the Vols' backfield. The running back depth chart is a bit thin after Lennon Creer opted to transfer and '08 leading rusher Arian Foster graduated. Montario Hardesty and Tauren Poole are Brown's biggest competitors, but the Wichita East (Kan.) alum was one of the nation's top running back recruits in '09 and with good reason. He is a threat to score every time he touches the ball and has the game-changing ability all coaches rave about. Brown totaled 3,698 yards and 52 rushing touchdowns over his final two high school seasons.

Andre DeBose, WR, Florida: Urban Meyer is one of the nation's premier recruiters, and he did it again in ' 09 by bringing in a top 10 class, headlined by DeBose. The 5-11, 176pound athlete led Sanford (Fla.) Seminole to the 6A championship as a senior with the winning touchdown in the final seconds, and that's the type of game-changing athlete Meyer wants on his roster. As a high school All-American, DeBose did it all. He was a running back, wide receiver, quarterback, kick and punt returner. At Florida, he will mostly focus his attention at wide receiver, but Meyer has compared him favorably to Harvin and could use him much in the same role. An injury might be the only thing that keeps DeBose off the field in '09.

Sun Belt Conference

By Jeff LippmanTell Jeff your opinion!

It might be hard to believe, but some of last season's best Fantasy talent was found in the Sun Belt conference.

The conference saw two individuals finish among the top 35 in the nation in rushing yards -- and they played on the same team -as tailback Tyrell Fenroy and quarterback Michael Desormeaux of Louisiana-Lafayette finished 8th and 32nd, respectively. Desormeaux finished just outside the top 25 in total yards and was a monster dual-threat guy.

The top pass-catching threat in the nation, in terms of receptions per game, could be found playing for North Texas, as Casey Fitzgerald caught 113 passes last season for 1,119 yards. His quarterback, Giovanni Vizza, finished fifth in the country in completions per game.

We won't be discussing those players this season, however, as all are gone from their respective campuses for the 2009 season. But the conference cupboard is not bare. No, the Sun Belt is alive and well and top-notch Fantasy talent is sprinkled throughout the nine schools which take part in football.

Keeping the pattern of one school having two top Fantasy studs like North Texas and Louisiana-Lafayette showcased last year, 2009 could see the Florida Atlantic Owls with two players that Fantasy owners will need to have on their rosters in all leagues. Quarterback Rusty Smith and wide receiver Cortez Gent are expected to be top talents this season. However, the most interesting Fantasy talent in the league could also come from Florida, but from the Panthers of Florida International in receiver T.Y. Hilton, who might just be the next Percy Harvin.

You don't always hear of these guys because they don't play for the BCS schools, but all Fantasy owners should know the names on this list if they want to compete in their leagues this season.

Top Players to Target

T.Y. Hilton, WR, Florida International: If quarterback Paul McCall knows what is good for him, and judging on last season's numbers he does, he'll be getting the ball to Hilton early and often in 2009. The most dangerous weapon in the Sun Belt, Hilton can do it all. He finished third in the entire country in all-purpose yardage with 180.3 per game as just a freshman last season and is back to better his numbers. The speed demon who was the sure-thing Sun Belt Freshman of the Year caught 41 passes for 1,013 yards and seven scores and finished second in the conference in receiving. He was sensational from the moment he first touched the football, scoring on a punt return during the season opener against Kansas. Hilton scored on kick returns, punt returns, receiving and even threw for a touchdown. The Panthers utilize him much like the Gators utilized Harvin. He's definitely that type of athletic talent.

Rusty Smith, QB, Florida Atlantic: Smith is the hands-down unquestioned top Fantasy quarterback in the Sun Belt. It doesn't get any better than what he's been able to produce. Smith finished atop the conference with 3,224 yards passing and 24 touchdowns last season. Those numbers are very solid but are actually a step back from his totals from 2007. That season he threw a school-record 32 touchdown passes and amassed over 3,600 yards with only nine interceptions. The Owls lost 1,000-yard rusher Charles Pierre and that could mean more stress on the passing game. With Cortez Gent and a plethora of talent at tight end returning, Smith will have the weapons to get back to his 2007 totals. There is no doubt he'll be the top Fantasy option at his position in the Sun Belt.

Jerrel Jernigan, WR, Troy: The Trojans return a very deep and very good receiving corps but the only Fantasy option who really stands out from the pack is Jernigan. The junior finished second in the conference last season in receptions per game with just under seven and third in yards with over 72. In all, Jernigan caught 77 passes for 868 yards and five touchdowns, en route to firstteam All-Sun Belt honors. One could argue the only reason he didn't reach 1,000 yards receiving is because he missed the equivalent of two games with a knee injury and was likely less than 100 percent healthy for much of the year. He's healthy as he enters 2009 and with the Trojans' highpowered spread offense, which saw him also rush 33 times for 254 yards and a touchdown and even throw a touchdown pass last year, Jernigan is expected to be among the best receiving options in the conference and across the country as well.

Reggie Arnold, RB, Arkansas State: Arnold is just about as close as it gets to a sure thing to rush for over 1,000 yards in 2009. Coming of a 2008 season in which he amassed 1,074 yards and averaged 89.5 per game, Arnold is attempting to become only the eighth player in NCAA history to rush for 1,000 yards in four consecutive seasons. The senior, who finished second in the conference in rushing last season, should easily get it done. Arnold was among the top 40 running backs in the nation in terms of yardage but his Fantasy value wasn't as high as one might think. What held him back was an inability to cross the goal line as he scored just seven times on the ground. Arnold may not enjoy much of an increase in his scoring, however, because quarterback Corey Leonard and backup tailback Derek Lawson -- who each scored four rushing touchdowns -- return as well. No doubt the team will score some points, but with Arnold not guaranteed to take the credit, it seems double-digit TDs could be asking a lot. Still, he'll be among the conference's best backs.

DuJuan Harris, RB, Troy: The Trojans are expected to compete for the Sun Belt title in 2009, thanks in large part to an electric spread offense that features a couple of deadly weapons. When it comes to the ground game, Harris is their main artillery. The junior totaled just under 1,100 yards on the ground and scored 11 times last season to finish fourth in the conference behind some very good talent. Harris averaged over 82 yards per game and also caught 36 passes for 216 yards and three more scores. The only thing stopping Harris from being the top tailback in the conference is the fact that quarterback Levi Brown has a toy chest full of other dangerous weapons to utilize as well. Harris will be the steady presence in the backfield, however, and will get his carries and should see over 1,000 yards once again. He'll likely be even more involved in the passing game and once again be among the best backs in the conference.

Josh Arauco, K, Arkansas State: Believe it or not, two of the top field goal kicking Fantasy options in the nation reside in the Sun Belt. Troy's Sam Glusman and the Red Wolves' Arauco should both be among the top kickers taken in any Fantasy league this season after both were up for the Lou Groza Award in 2008. Arauco led the conference and finished 12th in the nation in field goals last season with 1.6 per game and was top 35 in scoring with 88 points. Arkansas State gives him plenty of opportunities and Arauco usually makes good on those opportunities, as he's gone 44 of 59 over his three-year career. There is no doubt that Arauco and Glusman will once again be top Fantasy options and you really can't go wrong with whichever guy you choose.

Frank Goodin, RB, ULM: Monroe's Goodin was only the seventh-best running back in the Sun Belt last season, averaging 71.2 rushing yards per game. That still translated to being among the top 65 tailbacks in the nation as he generated 1,060 yards of offense on the season. He scored seven touchdowns with two coming through the air, and the junior will once again be the central focus of the offense. However, much of the personnel will undergo a makeover in 2009 and that could translate to the offense performing at a lower level than they did last year when they finished in the bottom half of the nation in scoring offense. Goodin could be on target for 1,000 rushing yards but it will be the lack of touchdowns that hurts his overall value.

Corey Leonard, QB, Arkansas State: Leonard returns as one of the best dualthreat quarterback options in the Sun Belt in 2009 after he totaled 2,863 yards of offense and 20 touchdowns last season. Leonard was among the top 40 nationally in total offense as he racked up 239 yards per game. With Leonard having the ability to run the football, the Arkansas State backfield will be one of the best in the conference as he teams with tailback Reggie Arnold to provide a one-two punch that should keep Sun Belt defenses on their toes. Leonard, who threw for 2,347 yards and 16 touchdowns, is also blessed with his full arsenal of receivers returning and that formula should add up to him improving his numbers across the board this season. He isn't the best passer in the conference and he certainly isn't the best runner, but no player in the Sun Belt combines the two skills as well as the Red Wolves' signal caller.

Phillip Tanner, RB, Middle Tennessee: On Nov. 22 of last season against conference rival North Texas, Middle Tennessee's Tanner touched the ball only 14 times and rushed for 159 yards and five touchdowns. That should be evidence enough that Tanner is going to be a very solid Fantasy option in 2009. The senior finished eighth in the conference with 59.5 rushing yards per game last season for a total of 714 yards and 15 touchdowns. Tanner also caught 13 passes for 135 yards and a touchdown. The Blue Raiders return most of their weapons this season and should definitely improve upon an offense that finished among the bottom half in the nation in terms of scoring last season. Tanner has great speed and power and also possesses the ability to catch the football, all things that could lead him towards improving upon last year's numbers. A 1,000yard season is not out of the question if he can stay healthy and the offensive line opens up a few more holes for him in 2009.

Cortez Gent, WR, Florida Atlantic: Gent and the Florida Atlantic passing game actually took a slight step back in 2008. His numbers were still good enough to finish fourth in the Sun Belt in receiving and rank 47th nationally with 60 catches for 935 yards and nine scores. Gent totaled 1,082 yards receiving in 2007 as a sophomore. The senior first team All-Sun Belt performer will once again team with top quarterback Rusty Smith and could rebound for their best year together yet. The team lost 1,000-yard rusher Charles Pierre, which could mean a more heavy reliance upon the aerial attack. Gent would be more than up to the challenge and Smith, who threw for over 3,200 yards and 24 touchdowns last year -- and over 3,600 yards and 32 TDs the year prior -- will be able to get him the ball. He'll definitely be among the top pass-catching options in the conference.

Top Sleeper

Undrea Sails, RB, Louisiana-Lafayette: When we say the Ragin' Cajuns had to start from scratch this spring in remaking a running game that lost the ninth-best running back in the country in Tyrell Fenroy, we mean it. Fenroy amassed 115 rushing yards per game and totaled 1,375 yards and 19 touchdowns. Their next closest back on the roster touched the ball 19 times for only 77 yards. That player, the senior Sails, has emerged as the team's top option for 2009. He'll have competition from incoming freshman Robert Walker but should see the majority of the carries that had been Fenroy's last year. If he can even sniff the kind of success his predecessor had, Sails could be one of the better Fantasy sleepers in the country and certainly in the Sun Belt.

Biggest Bust

Cam Montgomery, RB, North Texas: It's going to be tough for North Texas to light it up again this season after the slew of changes that happened after displaying one of the worst offenses in the nation in 2008. These changes are not for the better as quarterback Giovanni Vizza, who finished among the top five in the nation in completions per game, and his top receiver, Casey Fitzgerald, are gone. Montgomery, who rushed for over 900 yards and nine touchdowns last season, returns as one of the best returning backs in the conference but we're not so sure he'll perform quite as well as last year. The offense will be even more stagnant than ever with Riley Dodge, the coach's son, taking over behind center. He'll be learning on the job and he'll do so without his top receiving option. That doesn't bode well for Montgomery, though, because the Mean Green are a passing team and they'll keep to the air regardless of whether it is working or not. It only means the team will likely move the ball less and therefore give Montgomery fewer carries.

Top Three Newcomers

Riley Dodge, QB, North Texas: North Texas head coach Tom Dodge is proud to call his son the starting quarterback of the Mean Green. Dodge was a highly recruited signal caller who originally committed to play college football at Texas after playing for his father in high school. He saw time as a wide receiver before taking a redshirt last season and with Giovanni Vizza transferring, the stage is set for Dodge to assume the starting job. One thing is certain; he'll throw early and often as his predecessor, Vizza, finished fifth in the nation in completions per game last year despite not putting up anywhere near top five passing numbers. The team will throw. If they struggle, they'll throw some more and that should at least guarantee Dodge the opportunity to turn some heads in 2009. We're not sure about the weapons he'll have to utilize or the offensive line that will protect him but Dodge is a BCS talent who will be given every chance to pick apart Sun Belt defenses this season.

Josh Jarboe, WR, Troy: Troy already has a deep wide receiving corps that was among the top in the nation last season returning in 2009, so it was a no-brainer to take a risk in accepting the transfer of Jarboe, a troubled receiver who originally was a top recruit at Oklahoma. He could end up being a complete bust, never making a sound on the college football landscape, or the 6 -foot-2 freak talent could rise above his mistakes -namely a felony charge for having a gun in school and an expletive-filled rap posted on YouTube -- and take over as the top option for the Trojans' passing game. He's easily a BCS talent and has the ability to dominate Sun Belt defenses from out of Troy's highoctane spread offense.

Phillip Walker, RB, Louisiana-Lafayette: The Ragin' Cajuns will likely turn to Undrea Sails to replace the top running back in the conference from a season ago in Tyrell Fenroy. Fenroy rushed for 1,375 yards and 19 touchdowns last season to finish ninth in the nation but is gone now as the Cajuns attempt to pick up the pieces and regroup. Sails is the leading returning back and will have the opportunity to grab the starting job but Walker chose to attend LouisianaLafayette over North Carolina and could very well become the go-to guy before long. Walker is a speed demon and is every bit a BCS talent. If given the opportunity to run wild, he could become a very nice sleeper option among Sun Belt tailbacks as a true freshman this season.

Western Athletic Conference

By Michael HurcombTell Michael your opinion!

All the rave the last decade in college football has been the development of the spread offense. Football fans everywhere have always craved the deep passing routes and big plays. You will find plenty of those in a pass-happy offense.

We can't complain from a Fantasy standpoint. It's usually the spread offenses that dominant the College Fantasy Football arena.

But another trendy offense could be catching on shortly -- the Pistol Formation.

It was developed in 2004 by Nevada head coach Chris Ault. It was drummed up so Ault could exploit the one-on-one matchups with the wide receivers and help his undersized linemen block in open space.

In just a few years after its inception, the Wolfpack have one of the most dynamic offenses in the country and Ault is being praised for his revolutionary scheme.

The intrigue with the Pistol offense is that it infuses the traditional shotgun and singleback formations. The quarterback lines up three yards behind the center and the running back is a yard behind him. Usually three wide receivers are also on the field.

If you ever watch Nevada in action, you probably would surmise the Pistol looks a lot like an option offense. You would be right. Ault credits his inspiration to the 1997 Nebraska Cornhuskers, who ran the option out of a true spread offense.

However, his offense focuses more on the zone read and there is no key blocker for the quarterback when he gets out on the perimeter. It's a run-heavy offense, but when you have the right personnel it makes the world of difference.

Right now, Ault has one of the most exciting quarterbacks in the country in Colin Kaepernick. The redshirt junior has been a Fantasy star since taking over the starting job from Nick Graziano as a freshman in 2007. In his first two college games, he posted 864 total yards and 10 touchdowns. He has been a master of the Pistol offense ever since.

Nevada finished 2008 as the nation's fifth best offense ( 508.5 yards per game). They were the third best rushing offense (277.8 ypg) and Kaepernick's decision making had a lot to do with it. He finished the season with 2,849 yards, 22 touchdowns and just seven interceptions. He also rushed for 1,130 yards and 17 more scores.

While Nevada is the only school that primarily operates their offense around the Pistol formation, other schools have added some principles to their playbooks. Schools like Oregon, Virginia Tech, LSU, Ohio State, Missouri and Hawaii, which was one of the school's that came to fame operating out of the spread. Even the NFL is getting involved with the likes of the Kansas City Chiefs and New England Patriots following Ault's game plan.

It appears the foundations are in place for the Pistol offense to be a factor in the Fantasy College Football world for years to come.

Top Players to Target

Vai Taua, RB, Nevada: Taua delivered for Nevada in a huge way in '08. The Wolfpack were devastated by injury at running back, no worse than losing 1,000-yard rusher Luke Lippincott to a torn ACL early in the season. They were left to an inexperienced Taua, who managed just 19 carries for 112 yards and one touchdown as a redshirt freshman in 2007. In the end, he probably could be considered Nevada's savior last season. He rushed for 1,521 yards and 15 touchdowns, while adding 30 receptions for 243 yards and three touchdowns. He had eight 100-yard rushing games and at least one touchdown in 10 straight games to finish the season. Lippincott is coming back in 2009 -- we will get to that later -- but Taua will still be a big part of the Wolfpack attack.

Ryan Mathews, RB, Fresno State: Mathews has redemption on the mind in '09 after a knee injury slowed him for most of last season. Mathews, who rushed for 14 touchdowns as a freshman in '07, got off to a fast start in '08 with two 100-yard games and six touchdowns (four rushing) in his first four games. Then injury settled in. Mathews missed five games the rest of the season and was severely limited in the others. He rushed for just 606 yards and six touchdowns. Coach Pat Hill already said that as long as Mathews is healthy, he will see the bulk of carries. That spells bad news for Anthony Harding and Lonyae Miller, who combined for 1,693 rushing yards and 13 touchdowns last season.

Jeremy Avery, RB, Boise State: The Broncos are moving forward in '09 following the graduation of running back lan Johnson, who was the WAC's all-time leader with 58 rushing touchdowns. The bulk of work could now fall on the shoulders of Avery, who rushed for 614 yards and four touchdowns on 111 carries last season. He also posted 16 receptions for 226 yards. His biggest competition is D.J. Harper, but Avery has averaged 6.2 yards per carry in his first two college seasons and has as much big-play ability as anyone in the BSU backfield.

Daniel Porter, RB, Louisiana Tech: It appeared Porter was headed for a third straight season of playing a backup role in '08 before he took matters into his own hands. Porter had his breakout performance in the third game against Southeastern Louisiana with 97 rushing yards, 53 receiving yards and two touchdowns. He kept the pedal to the metal and emerged as Tech's go-to-back despite the fact ' 07 leading rusher Patrick Johnson was still on the team. Porter had five 100 -yard rushing games down the stretch and totaled 1,164 rushing yards on the season. He averaged 5.2 yards per carry, had 181 receiving yards and 10 total touchdowns (nine rushing). The Bulldogs should once again lean heavily on Porter in '09, as they make a legit run for the WAC title.

Kellen Moore, QB, Boise State: Broncos head coach Chris Petersen was likely realistic heading into the '08 season since a redshirt freshman was about to take over the quarterbacking duties. When the dust cleared, Moore by far exceeded everyone's expectations and Boise State nearly had an undefeated season. Moore earned WAC Freshman of the Year and second-team allconference honors after completing 281-of405 passes for 3,486 yards, 25 touchdowns and 10 interceptions. His 69.4 percent completion rate was tops in the WAC. Moore passed for more than 200 yards in 11 of 13 games, at least 300 yards in four games and netted a career-high 414 passing yards in a late-season win over Nevada. Moore also threw for three touchdowns five times. He did all that without appearing in one college game before the start of the season. We can't wait to see what he does with some experience under his belt.

Greg Alexander, QB, Hawaii: Speaking of rocky seasons, that's exactly how Alexander began the '08 campaign. Hawaii made the trip all the way to Gainesville, Fla., to face the eventual national champion Gators, and Alexander was barbequed by the Florida defense. He also suffered a bit of an injury that would set him back until mid-October, when coach Greg McMackin finally gave him another chance to start. Alexander wouldn't relinquish the starting job this time. Alexander started the final seven games as Hawaii went $4-3$. He is now the unquestioned starter heading into '09. Alexander completed 62.9 percent of his passes for 1,895 yards, 14 touchdowns and five interceptions in nine games. Hawaii might not be as pass-happy as they were under June Jones, but Alexander is still going to get plenty of chances to make plays.

Greg Salas and Malcolm Lane, WRs, Hawaii: Salas and Lane are going to be two key figures in the Hawaii passing game this season as the Warriors try to make up for the loss of Michael Washington (62 catches for 789 yards and six touchdowns) and Aaron Bain (52 catches for 557 yards and six touchdowns). Salas was Hawaii's leading receiver in '08 with 831 yards. He had three touchdowns. Lane wasn't far behind with 613 yards and tied for the team lead with six scores. Both Salas and Lane had some of their biggest games last season down the stretch with Alexander at the helm, so the familiarity with their quarterback should go a long way

Austin Pettis, WR, Boise State: Pettis is Boise State's top returning receiver after the Broncos lost three of their top four options, including '08 leading receiver Jeremy Childs ( 72 catches, 802 yards, 7 TDs). But it was Pettis last season who led the team with nine receiving touchdowns. In two seasons on campus, Pettis has totaled 95 catches for 1,032 yards and 15 touchdowns. He is a touchdown maker and will be a key figure in the Boise State passing game as they look to rebuild in '09.

Phillip Livas, WR, Louisiana Tech: Livas is one of the nation's best athletes you probably have never heard of. The 5-8, 175-pound speedster does it all for the Bulldogs. As a sophomore in '08, he had 2,019 all-purpose yards -- the third best mark in school history. He led the team with 43 catches for 607 yards and two touchdowns. He was third on the team with 30 rushes for 337 yards and two touchdowns for a team-high 11.2 yards per carry. He also led Tech with 245 punt return yards and two touchdowns, as well as 826 kickoff return yards and one touchdown. And what really makes it all worthwhile is that Livas was playing with a torn meniscus in his knee. It's going to be scary to see what he might do at 100 percent.

Kevin Jurovich, WR, San Jose State: We talked about Ryan Mathews as being a top bounce-back candidate in '09, but Jurovich is going to give him a run for his money in that category. After totaling 85 catches for 1,183 yards and nine touchdowns in '07, Jurovich missed most of the '08 season with mono. He did appear in the first two games, totaling 15 catches for 183 yards and one touchdown. He is finally back at 100 percent and looked sharp during the spring. Jurovich had six catches for 98 yards and one touchdown in the spring game and appears ready to reassume his role as a big-play receiver.

Top Sleepers

Titus Young, WR Boise State: Young better be on his best behavior in ' 09 because the Broncos desperately need him to stay active. Young was active for only three games in '08 due to a team-related suspension. But after it lost three of its top four wide receivers from last season, Boise State can't afford Young to sit idle on the bench again. The junior receiver was quite productive as a sophomore in the limited time he was on the field. He amassed 10 catches for 168 yards and one touchdown. He had seven catches for 142 yards and one touchdown in the opener against Idaho State. Young posted 44 catches for 629 yards and five touchdowns as a freshman in ' 07 , so he definitely has the talent to make a difference in Fantasy.

Luke Lippincott, RB, Nevada: The reports have been extremely positive about Lippincott's recovery from a torn ACL. Ault was extremely pleased with Lippincott's progress during the spring and is excited to get the sixth-year senior back in the lineup. Lippincott, who was granted a sixth year of eligibility by the NCAA in the offseason, has had a history of injury problems. But when he has played he has performed well in Ault's Pistol offense. He totaled 1,420 rushing yards in '07 and has 25 rushing touchdowns in 29 career games. Lippincott might play second fiddle to Taua, but there will still be plenty of yards to go around.

Omar Sawyer, WR, Utah State: The Aggies transitioned to a new regime in the spring under first-year coach Gary Andersen. While Sawyer is technically a returning starter, Andersen made the 5-9, 174-pound receiver earn his stripes. Sawyer answered the call and had an outstanding spring. He capped it with three catches for 196 yards and two touchdowns in the spring game. He had touchdown catches of 72 and 80 yards, and all three of his catches came from starting quarterback Diondre Borel. If Sawyer can show that same explosion in the fall, watch out.

Top Busts

Marcus Anderson, WR, New Mexico State: Wide receivers loved coming to New Mexico State when Hal Mumme roamed the sidelines since the veteran coach always produced one of the nation's top passing offenses. Too bad the defense never matched the effort and it ended up costing Mumme his job in the offseason. He was replaced by DeWayne Walker, who is expected to operate a more balanced offense. That's bad news for Anderson, who is the team's top returning receiver following the graduation of Chris Williams (86 catches, 1,271 yards) and A.J. Harris (78 catches, 713 yards). Anderson was third on the team in ' 08 with 50 catches for 617 yards. He tied Williams for the team lead with nine touchdowns. It also doesn't help Anderson's cause that quarterback Chase Holbrook has graduated.

Seyi Ajirotutu, WR, Fresno State: It's been a real treat to watch the development of Ajirotutu through the years. He has steadily progressed each season he has been at Fresno State and led the Bulldogs in receiving last season. He had 47 catches for 795 yards and five touchdowns. Three-year starting quarterback Tom Brandstater has graduated, so Fresno State must find a replacement. Right now, it's a wide-open race between Ebahn Feathers, Derek Carr and Ryan Colburn. While Ajirotutu will be a key figure in the passing game, his numbers could slip while the new quarterback endures some growing pains.

Top Freshmen/Newcomers

Lamon Muldrow, RB, San Jose State: Somehow Dick Tomey lured Muldrow to San Jose State. and the Spartans head coach likely won't keep the junior college AllAmerican on the sidelines in '09. Especially not after the Spartans averaged just 86.7 rushing yards per game last season (115th). Muldrow rushed for 2,915 yards and 44 touchdowns in two seasons at Sierra College (Calif.). He did well during the spring and capped it with 56 yards and a touchdown in the final scrimmage.

Marquis Avery, WR, San Jose State: Avery is another spoil of Tomey's time on the junior college recruiting trail. He might not be a highly-acclaimed recruit, but made his presence known in the spring. Avery put his 6-4 frame to good use during spring practice and capped it with a two-touchdown performance in the team's final scrimmage. He posted 60 catches for 766 yards and seven touchdowns last season and has already moved up the depth chart as a backup to Jalal Beauchman. With a strong start to the season he could become a starter in no time.

ECASSDTAST NEWS

Michael Smith, RB, Utah State: First-year coach Gary Andersen made quite the statement when he promoted Smith to third on the depth chart before spring practice, without the 5-9, 198-pound back taking a snap on the FBS level. The Eastern Arizona Junior College transfer rushed for 1,002 yards and 11 touchdowns on 131 carries last season and looks to infuse a rushing attack that had just one 100-yard performer in '08.

Robert Turbin and Marquis Butler stand in Smith's way, but it seems Andersen might want to put his stamp on the program and start playing his recruits.

Rodney Bradley, WR, Hawaii: The WAC is a conference that gets a lot of junior college transfers and Hawaii has had its fair share through the years. This year a player to keep tabs on is Bradley, a wide receiver transfer from Navarro (Texas) Community College. The 6-1, 190-pound Bradley will love it at Hawaii since he goes from a run-orientated offense to a pass-happy scheme. Bradley had three catches for 69 yards and one touchdown in the spring game and is a player that can help pick up the slack for the graduated Michael Washington (789 yards) and Aaron Bain (557 yards).

Fresh faces for '09

By Jeff LippmanTell Jeff your opinion!

One of the biggest differences between professional Fantasy football and that of the college game lies in the fact that there really are no keeper leagues. In college, if you have the talent, you are going to play almost from day one.

For fans, a new season means a new crop of players to get excited about. A college football player's shelf life is four years, and then it is on to bigger and better things. That's why every year a new crop of players are entered into the mix and often immediately pay dividends.

We saw it last season with the arrival of Terrell Pryor in Columbus. Pryor was perhaps the most anticipated incoming freshman in recent memory. And although he showcased skills few college players could rival, his 1,942 total yards and 19 total touchdowns, albeit impressive for a guy who shared duties with another behind center, still weren't that of a top-notch Fantasy option.

Don't misunderstand, Pryor should, with the quarterback job at Ohio State firmly his alone this season, have a monster year. It's just, of the best freshman in the nation in terms of Fantasy last season, Pryor wasn't at the top of the list.

Names like Baylor quarterback Robert Griffin, Oregon State running back Jacquizz Rodgers and Houston running back Bryce Beall all managed to become top Fantasy options in their first seasons on their respective campuses. If you saw them coming, kudos to you and your championship win last year. If not, well, that's what we're here for. The following are 10 incoming freshman and five junior college transfers to play very close attention to as they could immediately become Fantasy impact players in 2009.

Top Incoming Freshman

Tate Forcier, QB, Michigan: What happens when you cross the genius offensive mind of Rich Rodriguez with long-time football powerhouse Michigan? So far, you get one highly disappointed fan base after a dismal 3-9 season. If Big Blue can forget about the pain of 2008, however, Rodriguez was basically trying to win a NASCAR race behind the wheel of a clunker last season. He'll have a lot more horsepower under the hood in 2009 with incoming freshman Tate Forcier taking control of the offense. Steven Threet and Nick Sheridan failed miserably last season. Threet has transferred and Sheridan will be a capable backup but the unquestioned leader of the team is the top-notch recruit who was considered among the nation's best dualthreat quarterbacks coming out of high school. Just envision Pat White's college career under Rodriguez when you think about the possibilities for the newest Wolverine signal caller.

Jarvis Giles, RB, South Carolina: Raise your hand if you are getting to the point where you feel that Steve Spurrier is never going to turn South Carolina into a powerhouse? We feel your pain but implore you to consider this: While the "Fun ' $n$ Gun" was largely a high-flying passing offense for the Florida Gators in Spurrier's heyday, he almost always complemented his downfield prowess with a very solid running back capable of ripping big yardage if the defense plays pass. He hasn't had that runner thus far during his time with the Gamecocks. The incoming freshman Giles, ripped from Tennessee's grasp when former coach Phil Fulmer was fired, is just that type of explosive back. Making an immediate impact by rushing for 114 yards on 12 carries and two scores in the spring game, Giles is the type of shifty back with breakaway speed to become an immediate playmaker for USC.

Edwin Baker, RB, Michigan State: If you want to talk talent, few have the freak size and ability of the man destined to take over for the nation's best running back from last season. Javon Ringer will be rushing in the NFL this season and his 126 yards per game and 22 touchdowns have gone with him. The Spartans have already found their replacement in the 5 foot 10, 205-pound Baker, the only question is, can he stay healthy? Baker suffered knee injuries during his junior and senior years in high school but still managed to top 200 rushing yards six times over that two-year span, including a 462-yard performance during his senior season. Averaging 11.4 yards per carry is impressive no matter what the level of competition. Baker will be given every opportunity to grab the starting job and should burst onto the college football landscape in 2009 if he can stay healthy.

Andre DeBose, WR, Florida: Last season, with Percy Harvin firmly in place as everybody's All-American coming into the season, littleknown freshman speedster Jeff Demps slipped through the cracks. He slipped past plenty of SEC defenders, too, en route to putting up monster numbers in his first season in Gainesville. Demps is the established Fantasy option now, with Harvin gone, and DeBose steps into the role of secondary playmaker. Except, DeBose comes with far more hype than Demps ever had. The 5 foot 11, 176-pound "athlete" is another game changer like Demps and Harvin. He was a high school All-American where he excelled no matter what position he played, be it running back, wideout, quarterback or return man. He'll mainly be a receiver for the Gators but you know coach Urban Meyer will have him line up behind center plenty. He'll be an electric player the moment he steps on campus at Florida.

Rueben Randle, WR, LSU: It was a weird season in Death Valley in 2008 as the Tigers finished 8-5 and didn't contend for a national title for the first time in a while. With Jarrett Lee at the helm, the offense wasn't what it was under JaMarcus Russell or even Matt Flynn. And while the Tigers have two top incoming freshman signal callers on campus in Russell Shepard and Chris Garrett to challenge Lee and Jordan Jefferson, neither are assured of being the starter. What is a definite is that whoever throws the football, catching plenty of those passes will be the first-year wideout Randle. The 6 foot 3, near-200pound freak athlete was considered among the best, if not the best, receiving prospects in the nation. He is one of those athletes who was too good to play one position in high school and was his team's quarterback as the best overall player on the squad. The Tigers will be a better passing team this season and with Brandon LaFell and Demetrius Byrd gone, Randle and his sure hands and huge frame will immediately become an impact pass catcher for the Tigers.

Eric Ward, WR, Texas Tech: As one of the top wide receiver recruits in the country, who wouldn't want to play at Texas Tech? Easily among the top passing offenses in the nation in recent years, the Red Raiders offense is predicated around going long. With Michael Crabtree gone, Tech still has a plethora of talent in guys like Detron Lewis, Lyle Leong and Alexander Torres to make plays. However, after stealing Ward away from Big 12 rival Oklahoma, the Red Raiders will want to utilize his impressive breakaway speed immediately. He's a perfect fit, at 5 foot 11, 190-pounds, to start right away at slot receiver and has the ability to catch a ball on a slant and take it to the house almost every time he touches the football.

CESSPORTS.com FNME N N N

Christine Michael, RB, Texas A&M: This Christine packs a mansized punch and will provide the Aggies with an immediate answer for the lost production of tandem Jorvorskie Lane and Mike Goodson. While Lane and Goodson were A&M's version of thunder and lightning, Michael is both weather phenomenon wrapped in a tidy 5 foot 11, 205-pound package. He has the size of a wideout and the build of a bruising back with extreme speed mixed in. Absolutely a threat to score every time he touches the football, Michael will be an immediate impact player in coach Mike Sherman's offense.

Cierre Wood, RB, Notre Dame: There is no sense sugar coating things; the Fighting lrish have been a Fantasy wasteland in recent years. Late last season we began to see some potential from quarterback Jimmy Clausen and receivers Golden Tate and Michael Floyd, but the running back situation remained jumbled as ever. Wood should have no trouble supplanting Armando Allen as the team's top option out of the backfield as he employs outstanding field vision and possesses excellent footwork, as well as the ability to catch the football. He's likely going to be given the opportunity to start immediately for coach Charlie Weis and with the passing game developing nicely, the offensive line should be able to provide Wood with the holes necessary to take advantage of his explosiveness.

Chris Whaley, RB, Texas: It wasn't long ago that you could count on any Texas tailback to be a top Fantasy option worth taking among the early rounds. Who led the Longhorns in rushing last season? Quarterback Colt McCoy, and it wasn't even close. Coach Mack Brown hopes to keep McCoy more in the pocket this season and would like to go back to a more traditional running game and the freshman Whaley, who at 6 foot 3, 230-pounds looks more like a defensive end but with sick moves and elite speed, is the man who will make it all possible. Whaley is stepping into a perfect situation to expose his talents on the national level and has the ability to become a 1,000-yard rusher in his first season on a college campus.

Russell Shepard, QB, LSU: Shepard becomes the 10th of our top 10 freshman to watch this season over two other very deserving options. LSU possesses not one, but two top incoming freshman quarterbacks as Chris Garrett joined Shepard in Baton Rouge early in the summer to get a handle and compete for the starting job with Jarrett Lee and Jordan Jefferson. Shepard, in our opinion, holds more value than Garrett and also USC freshman quarterback Matt Barkley, for a few reasons. Regardless of whether or not he wins the starting job, Shepard is the type of do-everything athlete that will keep him on the field in a variety of ways. He's likely to line up at wideout, take handoffs behind center and be apart of many a trick play for head coach Les Miles, while Garrett and Barkley, if not tabbed immediate starters, will be waiting on the bench. If Shepard does win the starting gig, he'll immediately become one of the SEC's top dual-threat quarterbacks.

Top Junior College transfers

Cameron Kenney, WR, Oklahoma: Sooners coach Bob Stoops may have lost Eric Ward to Texas Tech but he made good with OU faithful by pulling one of the top JUCO transfers in the nation in the 6 foot 1, 190-pound Kenney. Kenney caught 86 passes while at Garden City (Kan.) Community College for a total of 1,213 yards and eight scores over two seasons. He has 4.4840 -speed and has the ability to blow by defenders on the line. He's going to become one of quarterback Sam Bradford's top options almost immediately and will make a major impact on the Sooners offense in 2009

Jamar Howard, WR, Cincinnati: Howard has freak size for a wide receiver at 6 foot 4, 210-pounds and couldn't have transferred into a better situation with the Bearcats. Cincinnati is primed to do big things via the air and top receiving option Mardy Gilyard will draw all the double teams, leaving other options wide open to go deep downfield. Howard has that type of home-run ability that could immediately make him a highlight-reel deep-ball threat.

Terrance Cain, QB, Utah: Cain definitely has an uphill climb before he becomes viable in Fantasy play. Coming to the Utes from Blinn College in Brenham, Texas, Cain threw for 3,138 yards and 29 touchdowns in 2008. Those are highly impressive numbers but he's competing for a starting job with returning signal caller Corbin Louks and true freshman Jordan Wynn. Cain has more talent than Louks and more experience than Wynn and if he can eventually become the team's starter, he could easily finish the season as the Mountain West's top newcomer.

Adam Froman, QB, Louisville: All indications have the Cardinals beginning the season with the JUCO transfer out of Santa Rosa Junior College at the helm. T 6 foot 4, 230-pound Froman was hand-picked by coach Steve Kragthorpe to lead the Louisville offense. Froman threw for 3,888 yards and 40 touchdowns last season at the JC level. Don't expect Louisville to throw under Kragthorpe as they did under Bobby Petrino, but Froman will immediately become a viable Fantasy option as the team's starter.

Tyrece Gaines, WR, Oregon: The Ducks lost two of their top receiving options from last season as Terrence Scott and Jaison Williams are gone. Oregon, who also lost head coach Mike Bellotti, will attempt the fill the void with the 6 foot 3,204 -pound JUCO transfer out of Butler Community College (Kan.). One of the top recruits in the nation, Gaines caught 28 passes for 490 yards and nine touchdowns in 2008. His situation, size and skills dictate that he should have an immediate impact for the Ducks and could prove a top newcomer in the Pac-10 this season.

Draft Day strategies

By Michael HurcombTell Michael your opinion!

I've been doing a lot of radio spots lately promoting the CBSSports.com College Fantasy Football product. Most of the listeners/hosts want to know how to get involved, what are the specs and how does the college game differ from regular Fantasy Football.

The last question I always find intriguing, because while the gist of Fantasy Football remains the same -- get the guys who put up the most points -- the two levels can differ dramatically when it comes to strategies.

While I enjoy, and laugh most of the time, at the spirited e-mails questioning our rankings, the one large misconception in College Fantasy Football is that the elite talent always makes the best Fantasy players. That's not always true.

It's not like we are purposely slighting the talent in a conference like the SEC because players from their conference don't make up half of our top 20 list. No, you have to understand, Fantasy is all about stats and not pro potential.

Yes, in Fantasy Football the top talent is usually the cream of the crop in Fantasy. Tom Brady is great in real life; he is great in Fantasy. Adrian Peterson is arguably the top running back in the NFL and widely considered the top Fantasy draft pick. But we are only dealing with 32 NFL teams and 53 players per team. In the College game, we are dealing with 120 teams and 70 -plus players per school.

What's the point of drafting a player like Southern Cal's running back C.J. Gable, who has to share carries with a bevy of other backs and might only crack 600 yards rushing, as opposed to Houston's Bryce Beall, who totaled 1,247 rushing yards, 496 receiving yards and 17 touchdowns (13 rushing) as a freshman in 2008.

You might not know a lot of Beall since Houston isn't a nationally recognized program, but he matters big time in Fantasy because his numbers are off the charts.

That's one of my top strategies every year -- scout the non-BCS conferences. There are plenty of quality players in conferences like the Mountain West, Conference USA and WAC. These conferences don't necessarily have the premier talent on defense like the SEC, so their offensive players are that much more valuable in Fantasy.

A popular strategy in Fantasy Football for years has been to build your running back depth before filling out other positions. In College Fantasy Football quarterback is king.

Most NFL teams run balanced offenses. In college the spread offense is the next big thing. Finding a dual-threat quarterback, a player that is light on their feet as well as having a rocket arm, is a college coach's dream. It allows him to get creative with the game plan and give opposing defensive coordinators nightmares.

When dealing with 120 teams and hundreds of skill players, there usually won't be a shortage of 1,000-yard backs or receivers. However, there are just 120 FBS starting quarterbacks and the signal callers that rack up 4,000-plus total yards and 40-plus touchdowns are rare.

Having a 300-yard day in the NFL is great, but at some colleges it's just an average game. Getting the quarterback that is a threat to put up 40 Fantasy points in a given week is huge.

There were 54 players last season that rushed for 1,000 yards and 33 receivers that broke the 1,000-yard barrier. Only two quarterbacks -Texas Tech's Graham Harrell and Houston's Case Keenum -- passed for more than 5,000 yards and only four other gunslingers -- Sam Bradford of Oklahoma, Rice's Chase Clement, Missouri's Chase Daniel and David Johnson of Tulsa -- made it to 4,000 passing yards.

Add Kansas' Todd Reesing, Max Hall of BYU and Heisman finalist Colt McCoy to the above list and that's the entire list of players in the NCAA who topped 4,000 total yards last season. Nevada quarterback Colin Kaepernick was just 21 yards shy of joining the elite group, but his 39 total touchdowns helped make up the difference in Fantasy.
(Writer's tangent: I've won three Fantasy championships the last two years with Kaepernick as my quarterback, so maybe drafting him is the best strategy of all.)

One important strategy that does apply to both Fantasy Football arenas is owners need to play the matchups on a weekly basis. Don't be afraid to sit a Fantasy stud if he has a tough game ahead. Being flexible with your roster and adding key walk-ons is as important to winning in the College game as regular Fantasy Football.

OK, enough chit-chat. It's time to break out the notepads. Start scribbling down your intended draft strategies and tiers. And best of luck in your hunt for a Fantasy College Football championship.
