Player Profiles (Alphabetical by Position)

Quarterback

Sam Bradford, STL

Bye: 9

Sam Bradford played fairly well as a rookie in 2010, but he had a terrible sophomore slump in 2011. He dealt with injuries and inconsistent play and had just one game with more than 12 Fantasy points in 10 outings (standard scoring). He also failed to throw multiple touchdowns in a game and he needs a lot of help coming into this season, as his receiving corps is very flimsy. New coach Jeff Fisher expects Bradford to improve and we're expecting him to play better (it's not like he can get much worse). He should be considered a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback on Draft Day worth taking with a late-round pick. The Rams should improve his receiving corps this offseason and the offensive line should block better. Those two things will help Bradford and hopefully he can be a bye-week or injury replacement for owners in the majority of leagues.

Tom Brady, NE

Bye: 9

The last time Tom Brady lost a Super Bowl to the New York Giants in 2007, he spent the following season on injured reserve after suffering a torn ACL in Week 1. So obviously, Brady can't do much worse than that in 2012. What's funny is that for a guy coming off a career-high 5,235 passing yards in 2011 with 39 touchdown passes and three touchdown runs, expectations are higher than ever before because he has what is arguably the best receiving corps of his career. His top three weapons of Wes Welker, Rob Gronkowski and Aaron Hernandez are all expected back, and the Patriots also added Brandon Lloyd and Donte Stallworth, while retaining Deion Branch. We doubt all these guys make the team, but Brady will clearly be surrounded by some great talent. Even with the loss of left tackle Matt Light, he should remain well protected and should pick apart most of the defenses he'll face. You can make an argument that Brady is the No. 1 Fantasy quarterback, but he's easily a Top 3 option among the group of Aaron Rodgers and Drew Brees. Brady should be drafted toward the end of Round 1 or beginning of Round 2 in all leagues.

Drew Brees, NO

Bye: 6

Drew Brees has signed a mega-rich deal to stay with the Saints, keeping him at the controls of one of the league's top offenses for years. He'll be in a position to throw all over the place, just as he did last season, setting the single-season NFL record with 5,476 passing yards with career-highs in completions (468), completion percentage (71.2 percent), passing touchdowns (46) and completions of 20-plus yards (69). He also threw just 14 interceptions, the second-lowest of any season where he played 16 games. And that's just the regular season - his postseason totals (seven touchdowns and 928 yards through the air) made him even better. And counting his postseason he had at least 300 yards passing and at least two touchdowns 13 times in 18 total games, including each of his last nine games. With at least 33 touchdowns and 4,300 yards in each of his last four seasons, Brees has replaced Peyton Manning as the absolute safest pick in Fantasy Football. You can worry about Sean Payton not being in New Orleans all you want, but with Brees entrenched in his offense for the last six seasons you can safely assume that he'll know what to do. Expect him to lean on his strengths and deliver another big season. With the number of elite Fantasy rushers at an all-time low, Brees is worth a first-round pick as a safe weekly must-start option. If you're in a league that starts multiple quarterbacks, Brees is fine as a Top-5 pick.

Matt Cassel, KC

Bye: 7

Matt Cassel is trying to rebound from last year's nightmare season that included a broken hand. He's also trying to prove he's a franchise quarterback. Even though Cassel is scheduled to start for the Chiefs this year, the new regime in Kansas City under coach Romeo Crennel doesn't seem to be all in with him as their long-term starter. He can change that with a strong year, but Fantasy owners need to see him prove it first. He only played in nine games in 2011 before breaking his hand, finishing with 1,713 passing yards 10 touchdowns and nine interceptions. He had just two games with at least 18 Fantasy points (standard scoring), and that limited production isn't going to make him a starter in Fantasy circles. He does have some quality weapons around him including Dwayne Bowe, and he has a new offensive coordinator in Brian Daboll, but Cassel should be considered just a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback in the majority of leagues because of his disappointing totals. He should only be drafted with a late-round pick, if at all.

Jay Cutler, CHI

Bye: 6

Jay Cutler's first three seasons in Chicago haven't been anything to write home about (63 touchdowns in 41 games). So why is there optimism for his fourth? The Bears parted ways with offensive coordinator Mike Martz, giving the controls instead to Mike Tice, who promises to create an offense that Cutler can thrive in. The Bears front office backed up Tice on that, acquiring wide receiver Brandon Marshall from the Dolphins and reuniting the former Denver teammates. They also brought in ex-Broncos assistant Jeremy Bates to coach up Cutler. Addressing the offensive line further will help Cutler, too. Whether or not these moves pay off remain to be seen, but there's optimism he could put up some big numbers thanks to the Bears' changes. We think Cutler's good enough to start in deeper formats (14-plus teams) and fantastic as a No. 2 quarterback. Expect him to last until the middle-to-late rounds on Draft Day.

Andy Dalton, CIN

Bye: 8

Andy Dalton walked into Cincinnati as a rookie with a new offense to learn and no offseason program to help him out. He walked out of the 2011 season as an established passer that Fantasy owners will look at as a No. 2 quarterback in 2012. His stats weren't amazing, especially compared to that of fellow rookie Cam Newton, but he did hold his own with 21 total touchdowns, 212 passing yards per game and a 6.59 yards per attempt average. Dalton has some advantages heading into the year: He throws to one of the league's most promising receivers in A.J. Green as well as tight end Jermaine Gresham, and he will remain in Jay Gruden's aggressive version of the West Coast offense. There's plenty of room for Dalton to improve, especially if the Bengals get him another receiver to throw to. Fantasy owners should draft him as a No. 2 quarterback with a middle- to late-round pick in all drafts, though he has the potential to finish the year as a borderline starter depending on just how much progress he makes with the rest of the Cincinnati offense.

Ryan Fitzpatrick, BUF

Bye: 8

Ryan Fitzpatrick needs to use the hot start he had in 2011 and carry it throughout the whole year in 2012. Fitzpatrick started the season with 82 Fantasy points in his first three games (standard scoring), which included nine touchdowns and just three interceptions and a dramatic comeback victory against New England in Week 3. His hot start convinced the Bills to give him a seven-year, $62 million contract extension, but Fitzpatrick struggled to close the season and was apparently dealing with a rib injury that was more serious than even the coaches were led to believe. In Fitzpatrick's first seven games of the year, he threw for 1,739 yards, 14 touchdowns and seven interceptions. After the injury, he had 2,093 yards, 10 touchdowns and 16 picks. He finished the year with a league-high 23 interceptions. We hope Fitzpatrick can turn things around, and the Bills helped him by keeping standout receiver Steve Johnson this offseason. But Fitzpatrick remains just a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback. He should only be drafted as a backup option with a late-round pick.

Joe Flacco, BAL

Bye: 8

For years, Fantasy owners have been cautiously optimistic about Joe Flacco having a breakout season. And for years, Fantasy owners have been disappointed. Flacco has been decidedly mediocre in his four seasons in Baltimore, never topping 3,622 passing yards or 25 touchdowns in a single season. Over the last three years including the playoffs (54 games) he's had nine games with at least 300 yards passing and 24 games with multiple touchdowns. He'll have promising young targets in Torrey Smith and Ed Dickson to go with reliable veterans like Anquan Boldin and Ray Rice, and he'll be in a contract year to boot. But with so many other quarterbacks established in the league, and plenty more on the cusp of joining them as elite Fantasy options, Flacco falls in line as a good enough No. 2 quarterback who some owners will settle for. Expect him to be a middle- to late-round pick who will start the season hot before cooling off - that's how he's performed in the previous few seasons.

Matt Flynn, SEA

Bye: 11

The Seahawks signed Matt Flynn as a free agent in March with the idea he would be their starting quarterback in 2012. That didn't happen this season as he was outplayed in the preseason by rookie Russell Wilson. Flynn will now open the season as the No. 2 passer, which severely limits his Fantasy value. Flynn could still see time as the starter this year, especially if Wilson struggles, but if that's the case just add him off the waiver wire. He is not worth drafting in the majority of Fantasy leagues.

Josh Freeman, TB

Bye: 5

Josh Freeman might have struggled in 2011 because of an underachieving receiving corps, a weaker-than-expected offensive line and a poor run game working next to him. All three of those excuses won't work for Freeman in 2012 - the Buccaneers have added talent to give Freeman a chance to put up his best stats yet. The team invested a ton of dough in offensive guard Carl Nicks and wide receiver Vincent Jackson, and new head coach Greg Schiano drafted versatile rookie Doug Martin to help run the football. So while Freeman's stats regressed significantly in 2011 (16 touchdowns vs. 22 interceptions; 13 games with 18 or fewer Fantasy points in standard scoring formats), there's hope that a big-play receiver like Jackson and an improved offensive line and run game can keep him moving forward. He himself shed 20 pounds this offseason in an effort to become more mobile -- he scored his first four rushing touchdowns last season. You'll be able to draft Freeman as a No. 2 quarterback with a late-round pick, making him far less risky than he was at this time last season. At that price, he's not a bad sleeper option.

Blaine Gabbert, JAC

Bye: 6

Blaine Gabbert's rookie season included him completing 50.8 percent of his passes for an average of 5.36 yards per attempt and turning over the ball more (11 interceptions, five fumbles lost) than scoring (12 passing touchdowns). He also claims he played on a hurt toe. Obviously, no one's thinking very highly of him - except for new head coach Mike Mularkey. The Jags' freshly-minted front man has worked with quality quarterbacks throughout his career (including Matt Ryan for his entire career) and plans to do his best work with Gabbert. That is, unless Chad Henne does better. The Jaguars added Henne as a free agent this offseason, and he's expected to push Gabbert for the starting job. Jacksonville's offense is on the rise as it added receivers Laurent Robinson and Justin Blackmon and still has a good offensive line and running back Maurice Jones-Drew. But the reality is that neither Jaguars passer should be considered in Fantasy, even with the receiving additions. Gabbert has some sleeper value, but unless you're in a dynasty/keeper league and can spend a late pick on him, he's not worth the risk. If he improves you should be able to find him on waivers during the year.

Robert Griffin III, WAS

Bye: 10

Finally, the Redskins have the franchise quarterback they've wanted for so long. The team drafted Baylor quarterback Robert Griffin III with the No. 2 overall pick in the 2012 NFL Draft, acquiring the pick in a blockbuster trade with the Rams. Griffin set or tied 54 school records in three full seasons at Baylor (he missed all but three games of his sophomore season with a torn right ACL which has long since healed). In total, Griffin threw for over 3,500 yards in each of his last two seasons and for 10,071 yards in 40 career games at Baylor. He also threw 77 touchdowns, rushed for another 32 and had just 17 interceptions and 13 fumbles over that time. You can count on him being under center for Washington to start the season. Griffin might be a bit wiry, but there's no doubting his arm strength, intelligence or mobility -- three things that will be utilized greatly in Shanahan's West Coast offense. We think he has a bright future in this league and would bank on him to play better than Andrew Luck in 2012. He's worth taking as a speculative No. 2 Fantasy QB with a middle- to late-round pick in seasonal leagues (ahead of Luck). He's worth the mid-round choice in dynasty/keeper leagues and is a Top-5 choice in rookie-only drafts.

Matt Hasselbeck, TEN

Last year, Matt Hasselbeck surprised with his best season since 2007, nearly leading the Titans to the playoffs. What did that get him? A seat on the bench. Hasselbeck enters 2012 as the No. 2 quarterback in Tennessee after losing a position battle with Jake Locker. While we expect Locker to remain the starter all year since he's their future, if he struggles we could see Hasselbeck return under center. If that happens then you can add Hasselbeck off the waiver wire, but he's not worth drafting if he's not starting. In 15 games last year with at least 20 pass attempts (he left one game early with an injury), Hasselbeck averaged 235 passing yards per game with 18 touchdowns.

Chad Henne, JAC

Chad Henne is expected to push Blaine Gabbert for the starting job in Jacksonville, but signs point to the second-year passer getting the edge over Henne. Henne never lived up to being the quarterback of the future for the Dolphins, and he finished 2011 on injured reserve with a left shoulder injury. Despite starting last season with an incredible performance against the Patriots, he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues. Henne would only have value if Gabbert got hurt or was benched during the season, which is possible.

Kevin Kolb, ARI

Kevin Kolb did not enjoy a good first year with the Cardinals in 2011, and it won't start off better in 2012. Kolb, who signed a huge contract with Arizona prior to last year but played in just nine games, was named the backup to John Skelton in late August. Kolb might have appeared to have maintained the upper hand in the competition by virtue of his contract, but his 2011 campaign of less than 2,000 yards passing with nine touchdowns and eight interceptions was too much to overlook. Fantasy owners should not spend a pick on him in any draft at this point.

Jake Locker, TEN

Promising young quarterback Jake Locker enters his second season in 2012 as the starting quarterback for the Titans after beating out Matt Hasselbeck in training camp. Locker has plenty of potential and didn't do too bad himself as a rookie in 2011, throwing for 542 yards and four touchdowns and rushing for 56 yards and a touchdown without a turnover and without starting a game (he attempted 66 passes but completed just 34 for a gross 51.5 completion percentage). Locker's mobility and arm strength make him enticing, but his accuracy might be a detriment at times. Still, with a quality receiving corps of Kenny Britt, Nate Washington, Kendall Wright, Jared Cook and Chris Johnson there is a lot of upside. We like Locker as a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback, and he's worth a late-round pick in all leagues. In dynasty formats, bump Locker up a little bit because it appears like he has a bright future.

Bye: 11Andrew Luck, IND

It's de ja vu all over again for the Colts after taking highly touted prospect Andrew Luck with the top pick in April's draft. A Heisman Trophy finalist, Luck finished his collegiate career with 80 passing touchdowns and seven rushing scores in 37 games, completing 66 percent of his passes with an 8.8 yards per attempt average (9,083 yards). He also averaged 26 rush yards per game. Luck has it all -- big size, a great arm, great mobility, quality smarts and a football pedigree. There's a general feeling that he's the biggest can't-miss draft prospect since Peyton Manning in 1998, and he'll be given the chance to start right away just like Manning. In standard seasonal formats, Luck will be swiped with a middle- to late-round pick as a No. 2 Fantasy QB with plenty of obvious upside (we do like Robert Griffin III better in 2012 but not long term). In dynasty/keeper league drafts, expect Luck to be taken with a mid-round pick because of his long-term potential. And he's a rock-solid No. 1 overall pick in rookie-only leagues.

Eli Manning, NYG

Last year may have been the passing of the torch with Eli Manning becoming the better quarterback than brother Peyton - on the field and in Fantasy. Now, part of that had to do with Peyton missing the entire 2011 season following neck surgery, but Eli also had an excellent year. He won his second Super Bowl (one more than Peyton), and he passed for 4,933 yards, 29 touchdowns and 16 interceptions. He also added a rushing touchdown. The yardage was a career high, and this was the third year in a row he passed for at least 4,000 yards. He also has at least 27 passing touchdowns over that span, and he should continue to improve with his developing receiving corps (though he'll be without Hakeem Nicks for most of the summer). While he might never reach the lofty passing stats his brother put up in Indy, Eli should be drafted first this year. We consider Eli a solid No. 1 Fantasy quarterback worth drafting as early as Round 5 in standard leagues.

Peyton Manning, DEN

After missing all of 2011 and being released by the Colts, quarterback Peyton Manning is apparently healthy enough to play for the Denver Broncos, who he signed with in March. Questions remain about just how good his arm is after having it affected by multiple neck surgeries, but first-hand accounts from people he's worked out with say he's as good as new. We want to see him take part in camp practices and preseason games before we get as excited, but with receivers like Demaryius Thomas and Eric Decker at his disposal as well as a familiar face in Jacob Tamme joining Manning in Denver, there's all sorts of potential for Manning to return to his 4,000-yard, 30-touchdown ways. If he looks as good as we remember, he'll be in the discussion as the seventh quarterback taken in drafts, right behind brother Eli, in Round 3 or 4. If he's not quite as smooth but clearly on track to play, he'll be more of a fifth- or sixth-round pick with the likes of Matt Ryan and Ben Roethlisberger. We'll continue to pay attention to Manning's progress this offseason.

Colt McCoy, CLEBye: 10

Colt McCoy lost the battle to start for the Browns this season after the first two weeks of training camp. Brandon Weeden, one of the team's first-round picks, won the job in early August. McCoy will now serve as the backup to Weeden after edging Seneca Wallace for the No. 2 job. Still, we wouldn't draft him.

Matt Moore, MIABye: 7

Matt Moore is expected to compete with rookie Ryan Tannehill and David Garrard for the starting job this season. Moore finished 2011 as Miami's starter, and he played well given the lack of talent around him. He took over for the injured Chad Henne in Week 6 and had at least 18 Fantasy points in five games (standard scoring). He ended up as a useful Fantasy option to owners in deeper leagues, and he could be in a similar position this year if he starts. That seems unlikely with Tannehill aboard, plus the Dolphins are lacking playmakers, especially with Brandon Marshall now in Chicago. If he somehow earns the starting job, Moore could be a serviceable No. 2 Fantasy quarterback in deeper formats.

Cam Newton, CARBye: 6

Expectations are sky-high for Cam Newton after he threw for more than 4,000 yards and 21 touchdowns and rushed for more than 700 yards and 14 touchdowns as a rookie. But get this: He accomplished those stats on 517 pass attempts and just 126 rush attempts. A dozen quarterbacks attempted more passes than he did and the rush attempts, while high for a quarterback, average under eight tries per game. With his completion percentage a fair 60 percent, there's not only room for improvement statistically but in activity as well. The Panthers are sure to do everything they can to work on stepping up Newton's game because defenses will do everything they can this offseason to slow him down. It'll be tough for Newton to rumble for 14 touchdowns again, but a boost in his passing stats isn't tough to expect. After finishing as a Top 5 Fantasy quarterback last season, it only makes sense to draft him as the same in 2012. We'd give Newton a look as early as Round 2 after three elite quarterbacks -- Aaron Rodgers, Drew Brees and Tom Brady -- and potentially a fourth guy -- Matthew Stafford -- get picked.

Carson Palmer, OAKBye: 5

Carson Palmer was pushed into the Raiders' starting quarterback role in the middle of last season and now gets the benefit of a full offseason and training camp with the team this summer. He didn't do horrible in his limited playing time last year, posting at least 18 Fantasy points in six games and finishing with 2,753 yards, 13 touchdowns and 16 interceptions with a rushing score. The best thing for Palmer was that any concerns about his arm strength or his previously-injured elbow seemed gone based on his play. Palmer has the chance for 3,500-plus passing yards and 25-plus touchdowns with the Raiders, and if he can limit his interceptions he should play well. We consider him a solid No. 2 Fantasy quarterback worth drafting with a late-round pick.

Christian Ponder, MINBye: 11

There's room for improvement for Christian Ponder as he enters his second season as the Vikings starting quarterback. In 10 starts last season, Ponder had multiple touchdowns in five games -- and no touchdowns in three. Only once did he top 250 passing yards while he rushed for at least 30 yards in three games. He was sacked at least three times in seven games and had at least two turnovers in four games. So, there's work to be done. The good news is that he plays in an offense suited for him and will work behind an improved offensive line that includes rookie left tackle Matt Kalil. The bad? If Adrian Peterson isn't 100 percent and the Vikings receiving corps goes unimproved, it's going to be easier for defenses to pick on Ponder and his stats could sink. Ponder's a good choice as a low-risk backup Fantasy quarterback with a very late-round pick.

Philip Rivers, SDBye: 7

Philip Rivers enters this season with the chance to rebound from a down year in 2011. Rivers had some positive stats with 4,624 yards and 27 touchdowns, but he threw a career-high 20 interceptions. That's something he needs to correct this year, but it's not the biggest hole he'll have to fill. Rivers lost a big target in Vincent Jackson, who signed as a free agent in Tampa Bay, and he'll try to make up for the departure with new talent in Robert Meachem and Eddie Royal. Along with Antonio Gates and Malcom Floyd, Rivers should be fine having players to throw at. He has at least 4,000 passing yards and 25 passing touchdowns in each of his past four seasons, and we expect him to stay at that level this year. He should be drafted as a Top 10 Fantasy quarterback in the majority of leagues in Round 4 at the latest.

Aaron Rodgers, GB

Bye: 10

Fantasy owners are more than ready to commit a first-round pick to Aaron Rodgers in Fantasy drafts after another fantastic season. Rodgers posted career-high numbers in passing yardage (4,643) and touchdowns (45) in 2011 along with a career-low six interceptions (as a starter). There's really little to worry about here as Rodgers' receiving corps remains in place and his offensive line is in good shape even with the loss of center Scott Wells. Despite offensive coordinator Joe Philbin leaving to coach the Dolphins, Rodgers has a firm grip on the offense and should be fine. The only concern would be the Packers investing heavily in a running back. They've called rush plays for running backs 322 and 357 times over the last two seasons; any move they make to bring in a player who could push that number higher would mean fewer pass attempts for Rodgers. But even if they use a time machine to bring back Barry Sanders, Rodgers should still have the chance to put up very good numbers. If your league scores all touchdowns the same, Rodgers should be taken anywhere from No. 4 to No. 10 overall. If your league discounts passing touchdowns then Rodgers might get picked between 10th and 20th overall. If your league starts multiple quarterbacks, it would be perfectly acceptable to take Rodgers with the first overall pick. Or if you're inclined to take a quarterback at No. 1 overall in any format then Rodgers is your man.

Ben Roethlisberger, PIT

Bye: 4

Ben Roethlisberger remains a No. 1 Fantasy quarterback headed into the season, one who might serve as a great Draft-Day bargain. Big Ben topped 4,000 passing yards last year for only the second time in his career, but the 21 touchdowns he threw for along with 14 interceptions didn't help. Nor did an ankle injury that cost him a game and limited him in others. Roethlisberger had just five games with two-plus touchdowns and another five games with over 300 yards. So why the optimism for 2012, especially with new offensive coordinator Todd Haley joining the Steelers? Roethlisberger should still have his receiving corps together, highlighted by Mike Wallace and Antonio Brown, and with the Steelers run game a huge question mark, there's some thought that Roethlisberger will top the 513 pass attempts he had last year as the team leans on him. The Steelers have even improved their O-line to better protect Big Ben. If you opt to pass on quarterbacks early in your draft, he'll be there as a good value between Rounds 5 and 7.

Tony Romo, DAL

Bye: 5

Tony Romo continues to prove that when healthy he is among the best Fantasy quarterbacks in all leagues. He returned from playing in only six games in 2010 due to a broken left collarbone to play in every game in 2011, even dealing with broken ribs and a punctured lung along the way. Romo posted outstanding stats with 4,184 passing yards, 31 touchdowns (not including a rushing touchdown) and just 10 interceptions. This was the third time in his career he had more than 4,000 passing yards and the second time he topped 30 touchdowns. Romo will present great value on Draft Day since he will be taken after Aaron Rodgers, Drew Brees, Tom Brady, Matthew Stafford and Cam Newton, putting him in the mix with Michael Vick, Eli Manning, Peyton Manning and Philip Rivers. There's a good chance Romo could fall to Round 4 or later, and he would be a steal at that point given his track record and his weapons: Miles Austin, Dez Bryant and Jason Witten.

Matt Ryan, ATL

Bye: 7

Matt Ryan took another step forward in 2011, posting a career-high 4,177 yards with 29 touchdowns and only 12 interceptions. He also rushed for a pair of touchdowns. That's pretty good but it's still not up to par with the elite passers in the NFL. However, Ryan still has the potential to be one of those guys thanks to his receiving corps. In the 13 games he played with Roddy White, Julio Jones and Tony Gonzalez last season he averaged 267 yards and two touchdowns per game. His offensive line should be improved this year, and the addition of Dirk Koetter as his offensive coordinator should bring some new wrinkles to agonize defenses. They also have a nice schedule that includes 10 indoor games. There's no reason to believe that Ryan won't be as good as he was last year, and there's plenty to believe he could exceed his 2011 stats. It wouldn't be a bad plan to wait for a quarterback like Ryan and pass on the elite passers in the first three rounds.

Mark Sanchez, NYJ

Bye: 9

Mark Sanchez has had quite an offseason. First, the Jets appeared to be interested in free agent quarterback Peyton Manning. When that failed, the Jets gave Sanchez a nice three-year contract extension for $40.5 million in March. Two weeks later, the Jets traded for Tim Tebow after Manning went to the Broncos. The Jets now plan to rotate quarterbacks with Tebow possibly getting up to 20 plays per game according to coach Rex Ryan. That would take Sanchez off the field, with the expectation being that he could sit deep in the red zone. Sanchez was actually the No. 10 Fantasy quarterback last year in standard leagues with 3,474 passing yards, 26 touchdowns and 18 interceptions with six rushing touchdowns. But those stats should decline dramatically with Tebow entering the picture (the return to a ground and pound offense won't help either). He should only be considered a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback in deep leagues, and don't be surprised if Sanchez goes undrafted based on the changes for the Jets this offseason.

Matt Schaub, HOU

Bye: 8

If you like garage sales, thrift stores and flea markets, then you'll love Matt Schaub. That's because he's one of the best bargains you'll find in drafts this summer. Schaub's 2011 was cut short because of a Lisfranc sprain in his foot, but he's been cleared for the start of the season. He's also at the controls of an explosive and cohesive offense that's primed for a Super Bowl run. So while his stats over the last two seasons aren't entirely breath-taking, he has averaged 263.4 passing yards and 1.46 total touchdowns per start. With a healthy Andre Johnson and a favorable schedule just part of the passing equation in Houston, owners in 12-team leagues can draft Schaub as a either a low-end No. 1 Fantasy option or a top-of-the-line backup with a pick as late as Round 7. In smaller leagues, he'll probably get taken as a quality No. 2 option. And here's an idea if you make Schaub your starter: Pair him with a young quarterback a few rounds later (maybe Andy Dalton or one of the rookie passers) and hope to catch fire with one or both quarterbacks over the course of the season.

Bye: 10

Following much deliberation, John Skelton will enter the season as the Cardinals' starting quarterback after beating out Kevin Kolb in the preseason. Skelton stepped in for Kolb for seven starts in 2011 and passed for 1,913 yards, 11 touchdowns and 14 interceptions. Kolb has more talent than Skelton, but Skelton was able to avoid mistakes during exhibition play. He now takes control of an offense that includes vet Larry Fitzgerald and new rookie Michael Floyd. He's considered a reserve Fantasy quarterback worth a late pick in deeper leagues, though there is hardly any certainty he will hold the job for a full season with Kolb peeking over his shoulder.

Alex Smith, SF

Bye: 9

Alex Smith is back with the 49ers after he signed a three-year contract in March. He was serviceable in helping them reach the NFC Championship Game, but he was not a good Fantasy quarterback. Smith passed for just 3,144 yards with 17 touchdowns and five interceptions. He also rushed for two touchdowns, but his Fantasy production was minimal with only five games with at least 20 points (he averaged 14.7 points per week in standard-scoring formats). He does have the chance to improve this season since the 49ers added weapons in Mario Manningham, Randy Moss and rookie A.J. Jenkins to go with Michael Crabtree and Vernon Davis, but Smith will have to prove himself first before owners begin to consider him a starter. However, he is worth drafting as a No. 2 Fantasy quarterback with a late-round pick in the majority of leagues; if Moss and Manningham can help put up some big stats, it'll only help Smith.

Matthew Stafford, DET

Bye: 5

After posting 5,038 yards and 41 touchdowns in 2011, no one doubts Matthew Stafford's ability to quarterback in the NFL any further. Playing in 16 games for the first time in his career, Stafford connected for multiple touchdowns 12 times and had at least three touchdowns in seven starts. He also threw for at least 250 yards in 12 starts and topped 300 yards in eight contests, including a 520-yard blowout at the Packers in Week 17. Sounds like a can't miss, right? He mostly is, just keep in mind that the Lions were forced to throw a lot last season because of running back injuries that have since healed. And Stafford remains a small injury risk himself because of his past. But with Calvin Johnson on his side along with a number of excellent playmakers, there's no reason to believe that Stafford will become a pedestrian passer in 2012. Count on him being either the fourth or fifth quarterback taken, right alongside Cam Newton, in every league, likely with a pick in Round 2 in the majority of standard leagues.

Ryan Tannehill, MIA

Bye: 7

The Dolphins made Texas A&M quarterback Ryan Tannehill their first-round pick in the 2012 NFL Draft. He'll be reunited with college head coach Mike Sherman, who is installing his version of the West Coast offense in Miami as their offensive coordinator. That's a big plus for Tannehill, who started 13 games for the Aggies last year, totaling 3,744 passing yards (61.6 comp. pct.) for 29 touchdowns and 15 interceptions with another 306 yards on the ground and four rushing touchdowns. While he's got a good chance to start, the fact remains that Miami's receiving corps is among the worst in the league. Tannehill has a tantalizing combination of size, intelligence, arm strength and mobility. He's considered a bit raw for the pros but has the tools necessary to be a quality passer in the league. Perhaps the biggest criticism is that he struggled to win games last year, often coming up short in the clutch. In Miami, Tannehill works as a late-round backup in seasonal Fantasy leagues. He'll be worth a middle- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and an early second-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Tim Tebow, NYJ

Bye: 9

Tim Tebow was traded from the Broncos to the Jets this offseason, and he's now expected to be part of a quarterback rotation with Mark Sanchez. The Jets have said they would like to get Tebow about 20 plays a game, and that might not necessarily be all at quarterback. Plans are reportedly in the works to get Tebow time as an H-back, fullback, running back and as a protector on punts. He might be a jack-of-all-trades but it could mean minimal and unpredictable stat production. There's always the chance Tebow beats out Sanchez for the starting job, or simply plays well enough to earn more snaps, but that's tough to figure unless Sanchez falters during the year. That's what happened in 2011 -- Tebow opened the season behind Kyle Orton, got the chance to play and led the Broncos to the playoffs. He had at least 18 Fantasy points in six games with 11 starts and was a star in one playoff victory against the Steelers. But now he has to prove himself again. Tebow should not be drafted in the majority of leagues if he's coming off the bench, but he is someone to monitor. If Sanchez struggles then don't be surprised to see Tebow start. And even in his limited roles he could be a decent source of rushing yards, which could make him worth a late-round pick in leagues that start multiple quarterbacks.

Michael Vick, PHI

Bye: 7

In total, Michael Vick had a positive season in 2011. He was the No. 11 quarterback in a standard league, and his 19.8 Fantasy points per game was ninth-best. But let's face it, you expected more, and hopefully he can rebound this season. What you should expect from Vick is outstanding production -- he had at least 23 Fantasy points in seven games, including three in a row to close the season. But you also have to expect an injury or two, and he missed three games last year with broken ribs. Vick has played in 16 games just once in his career, and his reckless style leaves him susceptible to getting hurt. That said, his production is unmatched at his position (see 2010) and if you draft him as a starter you should take a quality backup for when (not if) Vick goes down. We still value Vick as a No. 1 Fantasy quarterback in all leagues. He should be considered on Draft Day beginning in Round 3, and he should be taken some time after the Top 5 quarterbacks of Aaron Rodgers, Drew Brees, Tom Brady, Matthew Stafford and Cam Newton. Vick is in the next tier of quarterbacks with Eli Manning, Peyton Manning, Tony Romo and Philip Rivers; if he was guaranteed to play 16 games, he would be better than them all.

Joe Webb, MIN

Bye: 11

Joe Webb is slated to back up Christian Ponder in 2012, much like he did in 2011. The athletic quarterback had some ridiculous efforts in limited playing time last season but is not expected to play regularly unless Ponder misses extended snaps. Thus, Webb really only belongs on rosters in the deepest of dynasty/keeper leagues.

Brandon Weeden, CLE

Bye: 10

The Browns made Oklahoma State quarterback Brandon Weeden theirs with their second pick in the first round, and in early August they installed him as their starting quarterback. Weeden threw for 4,727 yards and 37 touchdowns with 12 interceptions as a senior and became one of two players in the FBS to complete more than 400 passes and complete at least 72.4 percent of his passes. Not bad for an old man -- Weeden will turn 29 on October 14. His offense isn't exactly perfect but he's got a solid cannon for an arm and the smarts to work in a West Coast style of offense. He might be fun to watch in the preseason and could end up having some big games in 2012 but probably not enough to warrant use in standard leagues. We would take a flier on him late in dynasty/keeper leagues drafts as well as spend an early- to middle-round pick on him in rookie-only formats.

Russell Wilson, SEA

Bye: 11

Seattle took Wisconsin quarterback Russell Wilson with the 75th overall pick in the third round of last April's draft with a plan of grooming him for the future. It didn't take long for him to ascend the Seahawks depth chart as he was named the starting quarterback over Matt Flynn in mid-August. After starring at North Carolina State, giving pro baseball a brief try and eventually ending up at Wisconsin, Wilson was one of the best signal-callers in the country last season. He set the NCAA record for pass efficiency at Wisconsin with a 191.8 rating while throwing for 33 touchdowns against just four interceptions. The concerns about Wilson seemed to be solely based on his height. He measured just shy of 5-foot-11 at the NFL combine, but questions about Wilson's height followed him to North Carolina State, then to Wisconsin and now to the NFL with the Seahawks. But Wilson's arm is fantastic -- he had a higher QB efficiency rating than Andrew Luck last season -- and has the stuff to make every throw. If he were taller, he'd be in the conversation with Luck and Robert Griffin III for the top draft-eligible quarterback. Still, he's worth a late pick in deeper Fantasy formats as a reserve QB.

Running Back

Vick Ballard, IND

Bye: 4

The Colts drafted Mississippi State running back Vick Ballard with a Round 5 pick in the NFL Draft. At 5-foot-11 and 219 pounds, Ballard is considered a power rusher who can work between the tackles. He ran for 1,189 yards and 10 touchdowns as a senior in 2011 but has dealt with endurance and fumbling issues. He might eventually be looked upon to do some short-yardage/goal-line work in the pros, but it won't come easy. Ballard is more of a project for the Colts than a potential sleeper. Save for a strong training camp, he doesn't appear to be a worthwhile Fantasy pick except late in dynasty/keeper leagues and rookie-only drafts.

Cedric Benson, GB

Bye: 10

Typically, a running back who tops 1,000 rushing yards and at least six touchdowns three consecutive seasons would be in demand. But Cedric Benson wasn't in demand until the Packers gave him a ring in mid-August. He signed with them and will attempt to bolster a RB corps that hasn't produced much over the past couple of seasons. With James Starks hobbled and the rest of the Packers running back corps a mess, this is quite an opportunity for Benson. The key here will be how he looks in camp and how well he can adapt to the Packers scheme. If he can get it together we could see him start the season as the team's starting rusher. That said, the Packers don't run the ball much, so Benson might only pick up 15 touches maximum per week. As of now he's no better than a speculative mid- to late-round pick.

LeGarrette Blount, TB

Bye: 5

We've solved the LeGarrette Blount mystery from 2011, but we're not excited about what might happen in 2012. In games where he had at least 18 carries last season, he totaled three 100-yard rush games and scored three touchdowns. Of course, Blount had only five games with at least 18 carries last year as he lost playing time because he fumbled too much (five on the season) and wasn't effective early on in games. He had decent totals given his opportunities -- 781 yards and five touchdowns on 184 carries (4.2 avg.), but Fantasy owners had Blount pegged to have as many as 100 more carries than he actually did. Fast forward to 2012, where Boise State rookie rusher Doug Martin joins the Bucs via a late first-round pick, and speculation has become rampant that Martin could overtake Blount for playing time this season. Blount isn't expected to come close to 18 carries a game in 2012, and he might even be limited to a part-time role that may or may not include goal-line work. We don't like Blount much these days -- he's at best a low-end No. 3 Fantasy rusher worth a pick in Round 7 or 8, or right around the time you might select Martin.

Ahmad Bradshaw, NYG

Bye: 11

Ahmad Bradshaw is in line for a big year if he can stay on the field. The Giants let Brandon Jacobs leave for the 49ers as a free agent, meaning Bradshaw shouldn't have to worry about sharing as many carries as he has in the past even with the Giants drafting David Wilson. The Giants will likely add a running back for depth, but Bradshaw should get the majority of touches. The key, however, will be staying healthy since Bradshaw has a history of foot problems and missed four games in 2011. He had a quality postseason effort in helping the Giants win the Super Bowl, and he is capable of reaching 1,500 total yards and 10 touchdowns given a full workload. We like Bradshaw as a high-end No. 2 Fantasy rusher who should be drafted in Round 3 in most formats. Just make sure he is 100 percent healthy in training camp and that his foot problems are a thing of the past.

Donald Brown, IND

Bye: 4

If you're into potential, Donald Brown is your guy. If you're into track records and results, you won't really like Brown much. Brown had career highs in carries (134), rushing yards (645), total yards (731) and touchdowns (five) last season, but he still hasn't really met the expectations we had for him when he was drafted out of UConn three years ago. Over 341 carries he's averaging 4.2 yards per with 10 touchdowns and 10 carries for 20 or more yards in 40 career games. But in five games last season where he had at least 14 carries he averaged 81 rush yards per game and scored in three of five matchups. Head coach Chuck Pagano tabbed him as an "every-down back" in early June and now the sky's the limit. He's worth drafting as a No. 3 Fantasy running back with a mid-round pick as he has some potential -- but he's had it for years.

Ronnie Brown, SD

Bye: 7

Ronnie Brown signed with the San Diego Chargers as the presumptive backup to Ryan Mathews in June, and has been thrust into a semi-starting role -- he'll likely share carries early with Curtis Brinkley and LeRon McClain -- while Mathews heals from a broken clavicle suffered in the preseason. Brown struggled with the Eagles in a limited role behind LeSean McCoy in 2011; he had just 42 carries for 136 yards and a touchdown, with no catches. Brown has minimal Fantasy value once Mathews returns, but could be a contributor for the first few weeks, and possibly play his way into more carries with an exceptional turn early on. He might be worth a later pick in drafts just for his early-season value in the San Diego offense.

Michael Bush, CHI

Bye: 6

Michael Bush made an interesting career move when he left Oakland to sign a four-year deal in Chicago this spring. Instead of signing somewhere where he could compete for a starting job, he'll now likely work as the second back behind Matt Forte, who signed a contract extension in mid-July. Splitting reps is a job Bush has been used to, doing so with Darren McFadden in Oakland for much of his career. But last year he got to be "the guy" for nine games with McFadden hurt and wound up totaling 740 rush yards, 307 receiving yards and five total touchdowns in those starts (he totaled 1,395 yards and eight touchdowns overall). With the Bears, Bush should still get his share of touches including at the goal line, but Forte will get the majority of work. A realistic projection for Bush is what he did with the Raiders in 2010 while sharing time with McFadden when he had 158 carries for 655 yards and eight touchdowns and 18 catches for 194 yards. He's best drafted as a quality reserve with a pick starting in Round 8.

Reggie Bush, MIA

Bye: 7

The knock on Reggie Bush when he landed in Miami prior to 2011 was that he wasn't durable enough to be an every-down back. Well, Bush shattered that image with a career-high 216 carries for 1,086 yards (a stunning 5.0 average) and six touchdowns and 43 catches for 296 yards and a touchdown. It was his first 1,000-yard rushing season, and he was able to easily hold off Daniel Thomas as the starter in the backfield. Bush had nine games with double digits in Fantasy points (standard scoring), including eight of his final nine outings of the season. He enters this year once again expected to share playing time with Thomas, but Bush should see plenty of touches with Miami lacking playmakers

(not to mention a rookie quarterback potentially starting). Fantasy owners might consider last year a fluke for Bush, and that's understandable given his history with the Saints. But Bush also showed when given a chance he could produce, and as such he should be considered a No. 2 Fantasy running back on Draft Day. We would draft Bush in Round 4 or 5 in standard leagues (probably a solid fourth-round pick in PPR drafts) thanks to his ability to catch the ball (at least 43 catches in five of six years). It also helps that Bush will be in a potential contract year this season.

Delone Carter, IND

Delone Carter will be the No. 2 running back for the Colts this year behind Donald Brown after struggling as a rookie. Entering the NFL last year with a pedigree for grinding between the tackles and being a goal-line back, Carter totaled two touchdowns and displayed a gross 3.7 yard rushing average over 101 carries while averaging 23.6 rushing yards per game. Figure him to be worth picking late in drafts as a reserve behind Brown. He could be considered a sleeper in deeper formats.

Jamaal Charles, KC

Bye: 7

Jamaal Charles was considered an elite Fantasy running back into 2011, but a torn ACL in Week 2 ruined his year. He now enters 2012 trying to prove he's back to 100 percent while also holding off bruising rusher Peyton Hillis for playing time. All signs point toward Charles being ready for training camp, but the addition of Hillis could limit his touches and certainly his goal-line work. Charles is no stranger to sharing carries since he did that in 2010 with Thomas Jones and still shined with more than 1,900 total yards and eight touchdowns. But since Charles might not be at 100 percent, and with Hillis having a relationship with new offensive coordinator Brian Daboll (the two worked together in Cleveland in 2010), Charles' value could be limited. We still consider Charles a No. 2 Fantasy running back, but between the knee and the Hillis addition he should not be considered an elite rusher coming into the season. Plan on drafting Charles with a pick around Round 4, and it's not a bad idea to handcuff him with Hillis (Round 8). If Charles does not return at 100 percent and is slow to start the season then Hillis could excel in an increased role.

Jonathan Dwyer, PIT

No one's talking about Jonathan Dwyer as a possible sleeper in Pittsburgh with starter Rashard Mendenhall (knee) likely sidelined to start the year. But he's had a tough start to his career, gaining 76 yards on one carry and 75 yards in his other 24 rushes over two seasons. Dwyer is still learning the nuances of his job and should at the very least compete for playing time this summer. But until he finds a way to move up the Steelers' depth chart, Fantasy owners shouldn't invest a draft pick in him. If he emerges, the waiver wire will be where he can be found.

Matt Forte, CHI

Bye: 6

Matt Forte has totaled at least 1,400 yards every season of his career. He might have a hard time doing that in 2012, even with a rich four-year deal signed in mid-July. Unsure of whether or not Forte would be in camp on-time, not to mention stay healthy for the whole season, the Bears added Michael Bush, and the plan is for him to help Forte with the rushing workload the same way Marion Barber was supposed to last year. That's going to wreck Forte's potential for a slew of yardage and touchdowns, the latter of which has been an issue for him in two of his last three years anyway. We love the guy as a player, but the potential for his touches to drop along with the potential for him to slow down now that he has a new deal casts a shadow on his Fantasy prospects for 2012. It's best to consider Forte a borderline No. 1/No. 2 running back worth a pick in Round 2 in pretty much every single draft this summer.

Arian Foster, HOU

Bye: 8

Not since LaDainian Tomlinson has there been a consensus No. 1 overall Fantasy running back like this. Arian Foster is not only expected to be the top rusher taken in every draft, but also the first player to be picked in every draft. How could he not? Last season he averaged 141.6 total yards per start (145.1 per start if you include the playoffs) and scored 12 total touchdowns. And over the last two seasons Foster has totaled over 100 yards and/or scored in 25 of 29 games. Foster did sign a lucrative contract extension this offseason, but he promised that the money will not change him, saying "I go into every season feeling like I have something to prove." He's proven enough to us that he's the cream of the crop at his position, and choosing him over an elite quarterback on Draft Day is still the right move given that you start multiple rushers and one quarterback in your league. Finalize the move by drafting his primary backup, Ben Tate, with a pick in Round 9.

Toby Gerhart, MIN

Bye: 11

Toby Gerhart will get looks in drafts for two good reasons: His productive 2011, and his spot on the Vikings' depth chart. With Adrian Peterson's status up in the air, Gerhart is expected to take on a larger role than normal at least to begin the year. After totaling 413 rush yards, 129 receiving yards and four touchdowns (three receiving) in the Vikings' final six 2011 games, that's not such a bad thing. Remember, even though it's possible Peterson comes back earlier than expected, it might take a while for Peterson to round into his old form, and Gerhart could benefit by getting extra work in the early going. If he does well with it like he did last year, he could keep a share of the rushing duties for a while. An MCL injury suffered last season shouldn't be an issue this summer. Expect Gerhart to be targeted by those owners who take Peterson early on. We like the upside of Gerhart considering all factors in the situation and would target him with a mid-round pick whether you draft Peterson with a Top 40 selection or not.

Mike Goodson, OAK

Bye: 5

Right when it looked like Mike Goodson would toil in Carolina for a fourth straight year, the team traded him. Now there's a chance for Goodson to get some work in on a weekly basis in Oakland, where he'll battle in camp this summer to earn playing time behind Darren McFadden. Remember, the Raiders lost Michael Bush in free agency, so Goodson could land some work in a competition with Taiwan Jones. With a hamstring injury that cost him some games behind him and a decent opportunity to play (McFadden is no lock to play 16 games) in front of him, Goodson's worth a late-round flier and is especially valuable as a handcuff to those owners who draft McFadden with an early-round pick - assuming he's ahead of Jones on the depth chart.

Frank Gore, SF

Bye: 9

Frank Gore remains the starting running back for the 49ers and their best Fantasy option in the backfield, but things got a lot more crowded this offseason with the signing of free agent Brandon Jacobs. Gore will now share playing time with Jacobs and speedy back Kendall Hunter, and his production could slip as a result. He had nine games with double digits in Fantasy points last year, and he rushed for 1,211 yards, which is the second-best total of his career. He also had eight touchdowns, but he caught just 17 passes for 114 yards, which were a career low. Don't be surprised if he lets you down because he loses some playing time to Jacobs (at the goal line) and Hunter (on longer third downs). We think he's fine to draft as a No. 2 Fantasy running back worth a pick between 20th and 35th overall in drafts (a little later in PPR drafts), but with the 49ers eyeing another deep playoff run, they clearly want to lighten Gore's workload so that he doesn't break down. Remember: He's turning 29 this season and injuries have started to slow him down, something the Niners might be admitting to with the addition of Jacobs.

Alex Green, GB

Bye: 10

A torn ACL ended Alex Green's season in October (with surgery in November), but he entered training camp on-time and worked with the offense without limitations. That's opened the door for him to get a good look in Fantasy. Green's a physical one-cut back who should serve as an excellent complement to James Starks, if not split with Starks on a weekly basis. Coming back from the torn ACL could rob Green of some quickness and cutting ability but he's more of a downhill runner anyway. There's a realistic chance he'll replace Ryan Grant as the second back in the Green Bay offense as well as potentially cash in at the goal line a few times during the year. We have no problem with Fantasy owners spending a mid-to-late pick on Green as a nice reserve with some upside to produce good stats.

BenJarvus Green-Ellis, CIN

Bye: 8

BenJarvus Green-Ellis signed with the Bengals this offseason, where he's expected to be their featured rusher after spending four years with the Patriots. Green-Ellis is good at two things: Scoring touchdowns and not fumbling the ball. He has 29 rushing touchdowns in his career, including 25 the past two seasons. He also has never lost a fumble in his career. Now, Green-Ellis doesn't have breakaway speed, and he is a mediocre receiver at best (26 catches for 292 yards in his career with no touchdowns), but the Bengals like him as a primary rusher. The team still hopes to add depth in their backfield for Green-Ellis; they already have top reserve Bernard Scott, but we expect Green-Ellis to get a consistent amount of carries in Cincy, something that didn't happen all the time in New England. He's safe to consider as a No. 2 Fantasy running back with a pick beginning in Round 5 since he should be able to rush for about 900 yards and about 10 touchdowns.

Shonn Greene, NYJ

Bye: 9

Shonn Greene has always been one of the more frustrating Fantasy rushers since he entered the NFL in 2009, and that might continue this year. The positives for Greene are this: New offensive coordinator Tony Sparano promises to run the ball more, LaDainian Tomlinson is gone, their schedule is actually favorable to run the ball and he's in a contract year, so he might be motivated to play well. The negatives, however, will continue to bother him: Tim Tebow's in town and could take away plenty of red-zone opportunities, the Jets offensive line isn't as great as it once was and Greene has disappointed us before. You should go into your draft with Greene as a No. 2 Fantasy running back and hope for the best. He will get touches -- he had 253 carries for 1,054 yards and six touchdowns with 30 catches for 211 yards last year -- but he only had five games with double digits in Fantasy points (standard scoring). Target Greene around Round 4, and just make sure you have quality rushing depth in case Greene struggles again.

Montario Hardesty, CLE

Bye: 10

Last year was considered a success for Montario Hardesty because he successfully came back from a torn ACL. Too bad he couldn't escape Trent Richardson, who the Browns drafted in April. Richardson is expected to start right away for Cleveland, pushing Hardesty to the bench. Hardesty totaled 388 yards on 88 carries and 14 catches in 10 games, including a wild 33-carry performance against the Seahawks that landed him 95 yards. He's still waiting to record his first NFL touchdown. With his outlook dim, Hardesty shouldn't be considered even a decent Fantasy option anymore. He's a late-round flier in deeper leagues.

Roy Helu, WAS

We wish we could tell you that Roy Helu has a chance to play regularly at a high level with the Redskins this season, but it's not a certainty. The Redskins re-signed veteran rusher Tim Hightower this offseason and several reports suggest he's going to be first in line to start ahead of Helu. Moreover, there seems to be a prevailing thought that Helu cannot hold up as the primary rusher for the Redskins and is more of a passing downs back. That thought was justified when he missed over a week's worth of practices with tendinitis in both of his Achilles tendons. With Evan Royster ahead of him on the depth chart, Hightower on the team and rookie Alfred Morris even getting some attention, Helu could struggle for regular playing time. Tack on Mike Shanahan interchanging his backs from week to week and there's no telling just how effective or ineffective Helu will be. For now consider Helu with a late-round pick in standard formats, with his value slightly higher in PPR formats.

Peyton Hillis, KC

Bye: 7

Peyton Hillis finds himself in Kansas City after a tumultuous 2011 in Cleveland where strep throats, agent advice and hard feelings cost him some playing time. In Kansas City he'll be reunited with former offensive coordinator Brian Daboll, who helped Hillis to his career-high numbers in 2010 with the Browns. He'll also be a "complement" to starter Jamaal Charles, according to head coach Romeo Crennel, but we think he'll be more than that. Hillis has good versatility to go with a physical rushing style, and if Charles is slow to come back from a torn ACL, we could see Hillis put in a lot of work. Here's a stat that makes a lot of sense: In his last three games with at least 20 carries, Hillis has 205 rush yards and three touchdowns (and good stats in all three). In fact, Hillis has scored and/or rushed for over 100 yards in each of his last 12 games with 20-plus carries (and only four TDs in his last 17 games without 20 carries). The more work he gets, the more productive he is - and that's precisely the issue now in Kansas City. If Charles is still the main running back there, Hillis' role will be minimized except near the goal line. But if Charles can't get going, Hillis could have some serious opportunities to regain some value in Fantasy. Consider him a No. 3 Fantasy running back because he should work at the goal line and some third downs, making him a pretty good pick after Round 8 in drafts.

Ronnie Hillman, DEN

Bye: 7

The Broncos took San Diego State rusher Ronnie Hillman with a third-round pick, and he might contribute some this season. Hillman left the school with a few records once owned by Marshall Faulk and finished the 2011 season fifth in the country with an average of 131.62 yards per game and 20 touchdowns. Hillman isn't a big back (5-foot-9, 200 pounds) but definitely plays bigger than he is. He's done good work between the tackles but is better known for his lateral agility and breakaway speed. Landing in Denver is nice since he won't be stuck behind a young back for long -- Willis McGahee will turn 31 in October and Knowshon Moreno is coming off of a torn ACL. We could see Hillman contribute this season, especially if he can perfect his pass blocking and receiving skills. Expect him to be taken late in all seasonal drafts as well as with a mid-to-late pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a second-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Kendall Hunter, SF

Bye: 9

The 49ers are expected to have a three-headed backfield this season with Frank Gore, Brandon Jacobs and Kendall Hunter. Gore remains the starter and the best Fantasy option, with Jacobs likely working in short-yardage/goal-line situations and Hunter on third downs. If something happened to Gore then Jacobs and Hunter would likely share carries with Hunter a candidate to pick up around 12 touches per game. Until that happens he's looking at more like eight touches per game, a number he matched or exceeded nine times as a rookie. He is worth a late-round pick in all leagues, though he's no longer the desirable backup to Gore that he was last year (that would be Jacobs).

Mark Ingram, NO

Bye: 6

We're not nearly as excited about Saints running back Mark Ingram this season as we were last season, but it doesn't mean that his expectations are changing much. Ingram missed the last four games of 2011 with a toe injury that actually put him on injured reserve, and that came after a heel injury cost him two games. Tack on some surgery on his knee this offseason (for the second time in three years) and the guy's been in the operating room more often than the end zone. The Saints don't run a ton to begin with, and when they do the reps are split amongst three players. We see him as the Saints' goal-line guy (he scored in five of 10 games last year) and a candidate for 10 touches per game, but so long as Darren Sproles and Pierre Thomas are active and running, he'll never have eye-popping stats. Ingram is worth a pick starting in Round 9 or 10 as a low-end No. 3 rusher worth starting when facing a good matchup. Drafting him along with another Saints running back (Sproles in Rounds 3-4 or Thomas in Rounds 8-10) isn't a bad way to attack your running back corps.

Fred Jackson, BUF

Bye: 8

Fred Jackson signed a two-year contract extension in early May with the Bills, likely signaling his return to the starting job. He had it last year and did exceptionally well with it through 10 games (1,376 total yards and six touchdowns) before suffering a broken leg in Week 11, ending his season. When he went down, C.J. Spiller took over and shined, leaving the Bills with two backs who deserve to play a lot this year. Jackson should remain the starter and the workhorse, but losing some carries will hurt his production. Sure, the fact that Jackson is 31 is alarming, but the Bills wouldn't have given him a modest extension if they didn't think he'd do well. Plus he's not a typical 31-year-old -- Jackson's career got started later than most backs, so he should still be productive. He's been a beast when healthy (more than 3,800 total yards and 15 total touchdowns the past three years), and he should be considered a No. 2 Fantasy running back. Plan on drafting him around Round 4 in all leagues.

Steven Jackson, STL

Bye: 9

Steven Jackson continues to prove he's among the best Fantasy options in all leagues. Heading into 2012, the Rams are talking about giving Jackson some help to keep him fresh, but he relishes his role as a workhorse. Since 2005, Jackson has at least 1,300 total yards in all but one season, which was 2007 when he was limited to 12 games. He still managed 1,273 total yards that year. In 2011, Jackson had more than 1,400 total yards and six touchdowns. We'd like to see Jackson score more (he has just 12 total touchdowns over the last two seasons), but it's difficult to argue with his production. Now, Jackson could be near the point of a breakdown, which is why the Rams are concerned. But as long as he's the starter without losing touches to either a third-down back or a goal-line vulture, he should be drafted as a low-end No. 1 Fantasy running back with a pick between 11th and 18th overall. Jackson, who has at least 40 catches in six of eight NFL seasons, also remains a standout option in PPR formats.

Brandon Jacobs, SF

Bye: 9

Brandon Jacobs left the Giants this offseason to join the 49ers, where he is expected to share carries with Frank Gore and Kendall Hunter. Jacobs, who has at least eight total touchdowns in three of the past four seasons, will likely work in short-yardage situations and be a change-of-pace bruiser behind Gore, who should remain the starter. Jacobs is not expected to get 200-plus carries with the 49ers, but if he gets 120-150 and works at the goal line he can be successful as a low-end No. 3 Fantasy running back in standard leagues -- as long as his knee is healthy. He suffered a knee injury in the second preseason game, which could impact his status for Week 1. His value is obviously limited in PPR formats, but he is worth a gamble with a late-round pick, especially if you take Gore this season. Just make sure Jacobs is 100 percent healthy heading into the start of the year.

LaMichael James, SF

Bye: 9

The 49ers took Oregon running back LaMichael James 61st overall in the second round of the NFL draft to join an already jammed backfield. James ran for 5,082 yards and 53 touchdowns on 771 career carries in three seasons with the Ducks. He had 49 carries for 382 yards and four TDs in two games against Harbaugh's Stanford team before the coach jumped to the NFL last year. James is small, fast and shifty, sort of like Darren Sproles (he's two inches taller). He's a blur with the ball and shows the same level of toughness that made undersized tailback Warrick Dunn a 12-year pro. The Niners will have some big decisions to make come training camp considering they must decide how to divvy up the touches between James, three-time Pro Bowler Frank Gore, newly signed Brandon Jacobs and reliable second-year player Kendall Hunter. He'll probably start out competing for work as a return man and also do some change-of-pace work, but the potential is there for him to be a significant contributor in the mold of Sproles or Dunn. It just might not happen right away. For now, he's worth a late flier in deeper seasonal Fantasy leagues, but we'd tout him with a middle- to late-round choice in dynasty/keeper leagues and a second-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Rashad Jennings, JAC

Bye: 6

Rashad Jennings, who missed all of 2011 with what initially was believed to be a torn ACL but turned out to be a knee injury that didn't require surgery, was looking like he might have to carry the load for the Jaguars this season. But then defending NFL rushing champ Maurice Jones-Drew returned from contract holdout Sept. 2. Jennings is still supposed to start Week 1 at Minnesota and will likely play a big role over the first few weeks as Jones-Drew learns the offense and gets back in playing shape. But eventually, despite all of his fine work this preseason, Jennings will go back to being a reserve. He's still a must-have handcuff option for Jones-Drew owners, especially since he figures to play such a big role in the beginning, but you shouldn't invest more than a middle-round pick in him now that Jones-Drew has returned.

Chris Johnson, TEN

Bye: 11

Ask Titans coach Mike Munchak why Chris Johnson failed in 2011 and he'll blame his conditioning as well as his supporting cast. Both issues should be long gone this year as Johnson will be a willing training camp participant, and the Titans made moves to spruce up their offensive line. Hopefully, Johnson will return to the rusher who averaged nearly 120 total yards per game and over 12 touchdowns per season in his first three years and not the lug who averaged 91.5 yards per game and scored four times in 2011. What's nice about Johnson is that he's still in a situation where he won't share the ball much, and you can't say that about most backs in the league. Because of that 20-touch potential to go with his gamebreaking speed, Johnson remains a candidate to be a low-end No. 1 Fantasy running back and even a late first-round pick. Forget about last year's misfortunes -- bank on him rebounding and being a better option than he was last season. He's worth a pick between 10th and 20th overall in all leagues.

Felix Jones, DAL

Felix Jones enters this season as the likely No. 2 running back in Dallas behind DeMarco Murray. The two are expected to split carries, but Murray should be the dominant rusher so long as he stays healthy. Still, Jones will have a fairly decent role, and he played well in 2011 when he had the opportunity (and was healthy). He had four games with double digits in Fantasy points (standard scoring) in the 12 games he was active. He missed time due to an ankle injury, but Jones played well late in the year when Murray was out. Failing a conditioning test at the start of camp didn't help things, but he's ready to roll now. Plan on drafting Jones with a mid- to late-round pick as a quality backup and is a necessary handcuff option for Murray.

Taiwan Jones, OAK

Bye: 5

Taiwan Jones has the chance for an increased role this season and could be the backup running back for the Raiders behind Darren McFadden. Jones is expected to compete with Mike Goodson and Marcel Reece for the reps, but Jones should see plenty of playing time even if he's not the true backup. The Raiders could use his speed and versatility as a change-of-pace rusher and in the passing game, and he has a similar skill set to Darren Sproles. Now, don't expect him to post Sproles-like stats, but he is worth drafting with a late-round pick in all leagues, especially PPR formats. And if wins the No. 2 job behind McFadden then his value will rise based on McFadden's injury history.

Maurice Jones-Drew, JAC

Year in and year out, Fantasy owners have come to expect good numbers from Maurice Jones-Drew, but that could be in jeopardy in 2012. Jones-Drew held out for a bigger contract throughout training camp and the preseason, waiting until Sept. 2 -- just a week before the team's regular-season opener at Minnesota -- to return. Even with him back with the team, questions about his availability remain. We already know Rashad Jennings will start over him in Week 1, and chances are Jennings will continue to play a significant role while Jones-Drew learns the offense and gets back in playing shape. Granted, when Jones-Drew inevitably returns to the starting role, he has a chance to be a Fantasy stud. Eleven of his 16 games in 2011 were good for at least 100 total yards, and he had less than 10 Fantasy points in three outings (standard scoring). He also set career-highs in carries (343), rushing yards (1,606) and receiving touchdowns (three) last year, which helped motivate him to ask for a new deal. And over his last three seasons as a full-timer for the Jags, he's averaging 117 total yards per game and has 34 touchdowns in those 46 games. Oh by the way, he played in all 16 games (he's played in at least 14 games every year of his career). Jones-Drew is normally a Top 5 player easily worth a first-round pick, but the aftermath of his holdout pushes him back to the second round of drafts. If you're not afraid to take MJD, make sure you spend a mid- to late-round pick on Jennings.

Mikel Leshoure is expected to make a smooth recovery from the Achilles' injury that sidelined him during his rookie year. He didn't have a smooth offseason - he was allegedly arrested twice for marijuana - and he will start the season with a two-game suspension. We love Leshoure's upside as a part-time interior rusher with goal-line work in tandem with Jahvid Best. We consider Leshoure a No. 3 Fantasy running back with the chance to be a starter in standard leagues. And if Best is out or limited (Kevin Smith remains on the roster) then Leshoure could shine. Plan on drafting Leshoure with a pick as early as Round 7, but don't be surprised if he's starting for you if he lives up to expectations.

Dion Lewis, PHI

Bye: 7

Dion Lewis has the chance to be the No. 2 running back for the Eagles behind LeSean McCoy. In 2011, Lewis was the No. 3 running back behind McCoy and Ronnie Brown, and he had limited totals in his rookie year with 23 carries for 102 yards and one touchdown, with the majority of his stats coming in a meaningless Week 17 game against Washington. An early July arrest isn't expected to result in a suspension. If Lewis is No. 2 on the depth chart he would have increased value as a handcuff to McCoy. If he's No. 3 then his value would be diminished. If he's the backup, consider drafting Lewis with a late-round pick if you draft McCoy in Round 1.

Marshawn Lynch, SEA

Bye: 11

The Seahawks paid Marshawn Lynch like a franchise running back when he signed a four-year, $31 million contract this offseason, but he'll have a hard time playing like one while suspended. Lynch was arrested for suspicion of DUI in mid-July, his third run-in with the law in five years. A suspension of at least four games is expected following this incident. That means Lynch won't be helpful for Fantasy owners for the first portion of the season, and his draft stock drops as a result. Though he has the obvious potential to play like a No. 1 Fantasy RB, owners shouldn't draft him as anything more than a No. 2 with a pick in Round 3 or 4. Furthermore, it's not a bad idea for owners who take Lynch to also grab either rookie Robert Turbin or veteran Leon Washington to supplant Lynch for the games he's suspended for. Both of those backs can be had with mid- to late-round picks.

Doug Martin, TB

Bye: 5

Boise State running back Doug Martin was picked by the Bucs late in the first round of the 2012 NFL Draft. He might have a chance to take a big chunk of the rushing workload from LeGarrette Blount. Martin was the primary bell cow for the Broncos for the last two seasons, totaling at least 1,350 total yards (over 1,100 rushing) and at least 14 touchdowns in each year. He also did some work on kick returns including a touchdown last season. New Bucs head coach Greg Schiano might see a lot of Ray Rice in Martin, who has Rice's body type and skill set minus the breakaway speed. And like Rice, Martin is a very heavy runner who is tough to tackle. Do not mistake him for a third-down back; he is capable of being a three-down back and reducing Blount's role significantly in Tampa Bay before the year is through. He's worth a pick in Round 8 and 9 in seasonal drafts and dynasty/keeper leagues and a Top 10 pick in rookie-only drafts.

Ryan Mathews, SD

Bye: 7

Ryan Mathews was considered a rock-solid first-round Fantasy running back until he got hurt during the first week of the preseason. A broken clavicle in his shoulder sidelined him and makes him a question mark for the start of the regular season. Injuries aren't new for Mathews: He missed four games as a rookie and two more last season. But big stats aren't foreign to him either as he averaged a smidge over 110 total yards per game last season and was expected to take on a big workload this season. He still might, but in the wake of his busted shoulder it remains to be seen if he'll get over 15 touches per game. We think he'll be effective once he's healthy, and so long as he stays healthy we'd take him with a pick between Rounds 2 and 3.

LeSean McCoy, PHI

Bye: 7

LeSean McCoy is among the best Fantasy running backs in the NFL, and he should continue to improve this year. He was a star in 2011 with double-digits in Fantasy points in all but his final start in Week 16 at Dallas (he sat out a meaningless Week 17 game against Washington). He scored a touchdown or gained 100 rushing yards in 14 games in a row, and he had 23 or more Fantasy points (standard scoring) five times. McCoy finished the year with 1,624 total yards and 20 total touchdowns, yet he was expected to do more in the passing game (he had 78 catches for 592 yards in 2010), so that's an area where he can improve this year. Despite some comments about his playing time from Andy Reid in April, McCoy should be considered a candidate for 2,000 total yards. Plan on drafting McCoy with a Top 3 overall selection in all leagues that do not start multiple quarterbacks. Arian Foster should be the first running back drafted, but McCoy is in the conversation to come next either before or right after Ray Rice.

Darren McFadden, OAK

Bye: 5

With Darren McFadden, injuries are at the forefront, not his electric play or impressive stat totals. After staying healthy for much of 2010, McFadden was limited to seven games in 2011 due to a Lisfranc injury to his right foot. But he's practiced in full this offseason and will be ready to be the primary weapon in the Raiders offense. Prior to going down, McFadden had 113 carries for 614 rushing yards and four touchdowns and 19 catches for 154 yards and one touchdown. He was averaging 14.3 Fantasy points per game, which would have made him a Top 10 running back if he kept up that pace -- and that was when he was sharing time with Michael Bush. Here are some other stats to ponder: McFadden has averaged 88.5 rush yards and 33.0 receiving yards over his last 20 starts with 15 total touchdowns -- all with Bush there as well. Bush is gone now, and McFadden's touches could actually increase given the lack of quality talent behind him. But so could the risk of injury, which is why McFadden should be considered a low-end No. 1 Fantasy rusher. He should be drafted in Round 2 with the idea of drafting his backup (Mike Goodson) later on. That premise isn't so bad compared to previous seasons because Bush would have required a mid-round pick. Now those owners who take McFadden early can wait until the middle/late rounds to take Goodson. Consider McFadden the largest risk-reward running back in Fantasy Football this season.

Willis McGahee, DEN

Bye: 7

Willis McGahee turned back the clock in 2011 and looked like a Fantasy star, but he's going to be challenged to do it again in 2012. McGahee is expected to be the starter for the Broncos after he had a resurgent season with 249 carries for 1,199 yards and four touchdowns and 12 catches for 51 yards and one touchdown. But this was when the Broncos were a run-first offense; with Peyton Manning now on the roster, the team is expected to throw the ball plenty. That could push McGahee off the field in certain situations because he's more of a chain-moving interior rusher and not a speedy receiver out of the backfield. It's impossible to expect another 249 carries out of McGahee, who will turn 31 this year, so the chances of him landing 1,000 rushing yards aren't strong. He could make up for it with more touchdowns and a bump in receiving yards, and that potential is what keeps him as a low-end No. 2 Fantasy running back in the minds of many. You're probably better off drafting him to be a No. 3 choice, but either way expect him to be taken with a pick in Round 7.

Bye: 9

Joe McKnight is expected to serve as the Jets' third-down back, replacing the role previously held by LaDainian Tomlinson. McKnight had a great meaningless game at the end of 2010 and has done nothing since, but he should have a chance to make some moves this summer. With a chance at 100 total touches in 2012, McKnight is worth a late-round flier in PPR leagues but not necessarily one in standard formats.

Rashard Mendenhall, PIT

Rashard Mendenhall comes into the season trying to recover from a torn ACL suffered on January 1 of this year. It is almost a certainty that he will miss some of training camp and the preseason, meaning that he won't be in great shape when the games start to count. Isaac Redman is among the Steelers expected to fill in while Mendenhall is sidelined. Anyone who drafts Mendenhall is making a long-term commitment to him as he'll be a benchwarmer for Fantasy owners until later on in the year barring a miraculous return. Because of that, he'll fall to at least the middle rounds of drafts. If you're willing to wait for Mendenhall, and expect him to play well upon his return, grab him starting in Round 9 or 10. If you're not willing to wait, or just don't want to take the risk on him being effective, look to Redman as a possible sleeper.

Lamar Miller, MIA

Bye: 7

The Dolphins moved up in the fourth round of the NFL draft to take University of Miami running back Lamar Miller. Miller played two seasons for the Hurricanes: After rushing for 646 yards and six touchdowns as a backup in 2010, Miller became a starter in 2011 and ran for 1,272 yards and nine touchdowns. He had been projected as a likely second-round pick but concerns about his surgically repaired shoulder pushed him down the draft board. Miller is a tough runner with deceptive second-gear acceleration and the size teams look for out of running backs (5-foot-11, 212 pounds). His hard-charging rushing style combined with his cutback ability and good speed (4.4 in the 40-yard dash) were appealing to the Dolphins even though they have Reggie Bush and Daniel Thomas already on the roster. It might take some time before we see Miller get regular reps. For now he's not worth a late pick in seasonal drafts because he's buried on the depth chart. He is worth a mid-to-late pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a third-round choice in rookie-only drafts given his long-term outlook.

Knowshon Moreno, DEN

Bye: 7

Knowshon Moreno has a lot to prove. He could end up being a third-down back behind Willis McGahee, but Moreno first has to show he's healthy after he suffered a torn ACL in Week 10 last year. Prior to getting hurt, Moreno struggled with just 37 carries for 179 yards and 11 catches for 101 yards and a touchdown. Moreno also got a DUI in the offseason which put him in coach John Fox's dog house. Moreno could benefit in a passing-down role with Peyton Manning now at quarterback for the Broncos, but he has to earn that spot first. Keep an eye on his role in training camp and make sure his knee is OK, but Moreno should be limited to being a decent late-round flier in drafts this summer.

Alfred Morris, WAS

Bye: 10

Washington selected Florida Atlantic running back Alfred Morris with a sixth-round pick in the NFL draft. The 5-foot-10, 219-pound Morris ran for 3,529 yards and 27 touchdowns over his career at FAU. Redskins coach Mike Shanahan has had success turning late-round picks into 1,000-yard runners and likes what he sees in Morris, citing his lateral quickness and cutting ability. The sixth-rounder starred at Florida Atlantic and is a compact runner with good leg strength, but he had 16 fumbles in 762 touches at school and seems destined to be a short yardage/goal-line back. He's worth a late pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and rookie-only drafts.

DeMarco Murray, DAL

Bye: 5

DeMarco Murray enters this season with plenty of promise after a solid debut in his rookie year. Murray was limited by injuries to start the season, but when he got a chance for increased playing time in Week 7 he took off. Murray had 25 carries for 253 yards and a touchdown against the Rams that week, which started a run of double digits in Fantasy points in four of his next five games (standard scoring). An ankle injury cost him the final three games of the season, but Murray showed enough to make Fantasy owners want to grab him for his sophomore campaign. The catch is that he's been injury prone dating back to his college days. Sharing reps will also be an issue for him so long as Felix Jones is on the roster, but we think Murray should wrestle the strong majority of snaps including at the goal-line. Getting fullback Lawrence Vickers to pop holes open for him will only help. When healthy, he should be a stud. We like the idea of drafting Murray as a solid No. 2 Fantasy running back with the chance for him to be a No. 1 option. He is worth drafting toward the end of Round 2 or beginning of Round 3 in all leagues, and pairing him with Jones with a pick in the middle rounds is strongly encouraged.

Isaiah Pead, STL

Bye: 9

The Rams took Cincinnati rusher Isaiah Pead with a second-round pick in the 2012 NFL Draft. Using exceptional bursts of straightaway speed, he ran well and started 26 of his 44 games, carried 545 times for 3,288 yards (6.03 per carry) and 27 touchdowns and caught 87 passes for 721 yards. He's a high-motor back who should do more on offense than initially believed when the Rams took him. And he has a chance to eventually take over for Jackson when the veteran rusher's contract runs out in St. Louis in two years. Figure that his playing time will be minimal in 2012 though he'll be S-Jax's backup. That makes him worth a late-round pick as a handcuff to Jackson in seasonal formats. We'd rank him as a mid-to-late choice in dynasty/keeper leagues and a second-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Adrian Peterson, MIN

Bye: 11

One of our biggest nightmares came true last Christmas Eve: Adrian Peterson tore multiple ligaments in his knee. The Vikings rusher had surgery soon thereafter and rehabbed all offseason, but he was ruled healthy in the preseason after a brief stint on the PUP List. He remains a question mark for Week 1. And even if he's ready to play Week 1, there's a question about how much work he'll get. The Vikings are also sure to take it very slow with their prized rusher and not risk getting him hurt further when he is ready. Peterson has had at least 10 touchdowns and 1,100 total yards in every single season (with 1,600 total in four of five years) of his career. Those numbers are in jeopardy considering his situation. For the first time since his rookie year, Peterson is not worth the risk in Round 1. In fact, he's a moderate risk in Round 2, especially with limited work prior to the start of the regular season. Figure Peterson to fall in between 15th and 30th overall in drafts. If you're the one drafting him, earmark at least an eighth-round pick for his backup, Toby Gerhart, just so you're safeguarded from a potential setback from Peterson.

Bernard Pierce, BAL

Bye: 8

The Ravens selected Temple running back Bernard Pierce with a third-round pick in the NFL draft. Pierce had a pair of 1,000-yard rushing seasons with Temple and finished his career ranked second in career yards rushing (3,570) despite playing only three seasons. The 6-foot, 218-pounder scored 53 career touchdowns, including 21 as a senior, when he finished with 1,481 yards on the ground. Pierce is a zone runner who is extremely physical. Though he does have a history with minor injuries, he landed in a great spot where he can take his time and learn the nuances of the game from the Ravens' staff. He should be in position to back up Ray Rice and might be worth a late pick just to be his handcuff. Otherwise, he's worth a late pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a mid-to-late pick in rookie-only drafts.

Bilal Powell, NYJ

Bye: 9

Bilal Powell saw little action as a rookie in 2011, but that should change this year since he'll battle for playing time behind Shonn Greene this summer. He might best serve as the "true" backup to Greene because Powell's a physical inside runner like Greene. So we might not see a ton of him unless something happens to Greene. There is a chance that he could end up being the starter for the Jets in 2013 since Greene is a free agent and might not be asked to return. We wouldn't draft Powell in standard leagues, but he is worth monitoring once the season starts. And in dynasty/keeper leagues, Powell is worth drafting with a late-round pick with the hope that he can crack the starting lineup a year from now.

Chris Rainey, PIT

Bye: 4

The Steelers took Florida running back Chris Rainey in the fifth round of the NFL Draft. The 5-foot-8, 180-pound Rainey could make an immediate impact as a special teams player and might contribute sparingly as a rookie. Rainey has explosive speed (4.37) and was a dual threat with the Gators, where he ran for 861 yards and two touchdowns as a senior. He also caught 31 passes for 381 yards and two scores and has done work on punt returns. He is small and has a history of shoulder injuries, so chances are he won't be a regular player like Antonio Brown or Percy Harvin -- at least not right away. He's probably best left for owners in leagues that reward special-teams yardage who have a late-round pick to burn. Otherwise expect him to go late in dynasty/keeper leagues and with a mid-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Bye: 4

Isaac Redman was on his way to a tremendous opportunity when he banged up his hip. Now there's some question about just how much upside he has. Redman looked great in the playoffs against Denver with Rashard Mendenhall out, rushing for 121 yards on 17 carries with two catches for 21 yards, so he showed he can handle the role of a primary back. But Mendenhall will be on the active roster to start the season and eventually contribute, and Jonathan Dwyer has run very well this summer. With Redman's hip possibly holding him back -- he has said it might bother him all year -- he stands to serve as a No. 3 running back to begin the season. Figure him to be a good No. 3 RB worth a pick no sooner than Round 6.

Bye: 5

Marcel Reece will battle in training camp to retain his role in the offense as a play making fullback, if not work for more playing time. We know that the backup running back job is an important position now that Michael Bush is gone since starter Darren McFadden is an injury risk. Reece played in a reserve role in 2011 and had 17 carries for 112 yards and 27 catches for 301 yards and two touchdowns. He will compete with Taiwan Jones and Mike Goodson for the job, and the winner of this battle is worth drafting with a late-round pick whether you draft McFadden or not.

Ray Rice, BAL

Bye: 8

How will Ray Rice follow-up a career-best season? After signing a five-year, $40 million deal in mid-July, he'll be pressed to at least match his career-highs in rush yards (1,364), rushing scores (12), receiving yards (704) and receiving touchdowns (three). Last season was Rice's second 2,000-total-yard campaign in three years and his first year with double-digit touchdowns. He's had at least 330 total touches in each of his last three years and has pretty much proven that he's among the best of the dying breed of every-down backs. We've seen players take it easy once they get paid (Chris Johnson last year, for example), but Rice seems like a hard worker with a chip on his shoulder on a team that doesn't settle for underachievers, so perhaps he won't fall into that trap. Expect Rice to stay productive and be taken with a Top-5 pick in all leagues -- potentially second overall.

Trent Richardson, CLEBye: 10

The Browns made Alabama running back Trent Richardson their first-round pick with the No. 3 overall selection. At first Richardson fit the team like a glove given his skill-set as a strong, quick, versatile and tough runner. But in early August his left knee began to swell and as a result he had his second arthroscopic procedure in six months (he had a meniscus injury before the NFL Draft but it had healed). The Browns anticipate him being ready for the start of the season but questions remain about what kind of shape he and his knee will be in when the games start to count. Richardson might be the best running back prospect to come out since Adrian Peterson, but this knee issue is clouding his otherwise amazing potential: he averaged 5.9 yards per carry (1,679 yards on 283 totes) with 21 touchdowns with another three scores through the air on 29 grabs for 338 yards as a senior. He had six straight games with at least 107 rush yards and had at least 100 total yards in all but one game in 2011 (he had three 200-total-yard games!). Fantasy owners have to consider him an injury risk no longer worth trusting as a No. 1 back. Think of Richardson as a high-end No. 2 running back in all leagues worth a second-round pick after 12th overall. We'd still take him with the same second-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a Top 5 choice in rookie-only drafts.

Stevan Ridley, NEBye: 9

Stevan Ridley is going to be a popular sleeper this year now that he's expected to be the primary running back for the Patriots with BenJarvus Green-Ellis gone to Cincinnati. New England will employ a multi-back system with Ridley, Joseph Addai, Shane Vereen and Danny Woodhead, but Ridley has the most upside by far. For starters, he's the most physical of the trio and should help replace Green-Ellis at the goal line (Green-Ellis had 11 rushing touchdowns last year and 25 over the last two years). As a rookie, Ridley averaged 5.1 yards a carry with 87 attempts for 441 yards and one touchdown. If he gets close to 200 carries (Green-Ellis had 181 last year) then he could approach 1,000 rushing yards and eight touchdowns. We love his ability and believe he should be drafted in all leagues with a pick starting in late Round 6. He should be taken as a No. 3 Fantasy running back as of now, but a strong preseason will only push him into the Top 24 runners in the league and thus make him significantly more valuable.

Javon Ringer, TENBye: 11

Javon Ringer will battle for the backup job behind Chris Johnson in Tennessee this summer. A hand injury ended his 2011 season prematurely, but it didn't matter much since he struggled for much of the year. Even though he's in a contract year, Ringer isn't expected to be a factor for Fantasy owners to consider -- second-year rusher Jamie Harper might be the better backup to Johnson. Ringer's worth a late pick in the deepest of seasonal Fantasy leagues only.

Jacquizz Rodgers, ATLBye: 7

Jacquizz Rodgers should end up as the primary backup behind Michael Turner and the change-of-pace back for the Falcons in 2012. Rodgers didn't have a sensational rookie season but did run for 205 yards, catch for 188 yards and score twice -- once rushing and once receiving. Expect Rodgers to get a bump in playing time, and certainly consider him a must-draft running back if you spend an early-round pick on Turner. Rodgers should be attainable with a pick starting in Round 12 in drafts.

Evan Royster, WASBye: 10

Evan Royster has the chance to play a prominent role with the Redskins in his second year after a promising debut as a rookie. Royster stepped into the starting lineup the last two weeks of last season when Roy Helu was slowed by knee and toe injuries. He rushed for 100 yards in both games, finished with 328 yards for the season and averaged 5.9 yards per carry. Royster could open the season as the starter with Helu and Tim Hightower dealing with injuries, and he has plenty of upside. We like Royster as a quality reserve in 2012, well worth a mid-round pick. Just be prepared to juggle Redskins running backs since Mike Shanahan has trouble sticking with one guy all season.

Bernard Scott, CINBye: 8

Bernard Scott's been a trendy low-end sleeper for years, and 2012 is no different. The Bengals are interested in giving the fourth-year running back a chance at doing more in the offense, potentially working in tandem with newly signed running back BenJarvus Green-Ellis. He's groomed for it: Scott posted career-highs in carries (112), yards (380) and touchdowns (three) in 2011. The only ugly factor was his rushing average dipping from a promising 4.9 in 2010 to an ugly 3.4 last season. Scott might not get many chances to score, and his track record suggests that he might not be overly effective even if he had around 10 touches per game. He's worth a late-round pick, and that's assuming the Bengals don't add another running back to their mix.

Kevin Smith, DETBye: 5

Kevin Smith is back with the Lions after successfully coming back from a knee injury in 2011. And it's a good thing he's there because he'll likely begin the season as Detroit's starter. Jahvid Best continued his struggles with concussion symptoms, so much so that coach Jim Schwartz said in early August that Best was not day-to-day but week-to-week. And Mikel Leshoure is suspended for the first two games of the 2012 season. That opens the door for Smith to begin the year as at least a start-worthy Fantasy rusher and potentially be a capable contributor throughout the season. Smith totaled 535 yards seven touchdowns in seven games when the Lions desperately needed someone to step up in their run game, but he got nicked up multiple times upon his Week 10 return. He's a bit injury prone himself, but whether you're looking for a mid-round breakout candidate or a back to help you through the first couple of weeks of the season, Smith represents a good value as a pick between Round 6 and 8. We already love his Week 1 matchup against the Rams.

C.J. Spiller, BUFBye: 8

C.J. Spiller is expected to share reps with Fred Jackson in Buffalo after finishing 2011 strong as his replacement. Jackson went down with a broken leg in Week 11, and Spiller took over as the starter and shined, posting double digits in Fantasy points (standard scoring) in four of his final five games, finishing with 67 carries for 391 yards (5.6 average) and three touchdowns and 21 catches for 172 yards and two touchdowns over that span. Spiller would be a tremendous Fantasy option this year if he was the starter and not sharing carries, but Jackson is expected back at 100 percent and should be given more opportunities. We still expect Spiller to have a prominent role because he's a faster option than Jackson, but he should only be considered a No. 3 Fantasy running back. He should be drafted after Jackson around Round 7, and hopefully the Bills will give Spiller enough touches that he can be successful for owners in all leagues.

Darren Sproles, NOBye: 6

What does Darren Sproles have for an encore? A year ago there was speculation about just how much playing time he'd have in New Orleans, especially after a preseason that saw him total 10 touches in three games. As it turned out, Sproles' playing time was plentiful, and what he did when he got the ball was outstanding. Sproles had 87 carries for 603 yards (6.9 average) and two rushing touchdowns to go with 86 catches for 710 receiving yards (8.3 average) and seven scores. He went one step further in the playoffs, catching an NFL postseason-record 15 passes against the 49ers. He led all running backs with 111 targets. We expect Sproles to remain involved in the Saints' offense complete with some new wrinkles introduced for this season, and we know that with Drew Brees under center, defenses will never load the box against Sproles. It might seem like a little much to expect Sproles to come close to the 1,313 total yards and nine scores he had last year on his 173 touches, but he should be helpful to owners. We'd draft him as a No. 2 Fantasy running back in standard formats with a pick as soon as Round 4. In PPR formats the guy is a borderline No. 1 Fantasy rusher definitely worth a third-round pick. And it's not a bad move to pair him with another Saints running back (Thomas or Ingram in Rounds 7 through 10) just to lock up as much of that backfield as possible.

James Starks, GBBye: 10

James Starks' 2011 season started off great with 172 total yards and a touchdown over his first two games. Those would prove to be his best stats on the year as he failed to score a touchdown in his final 12 games (he missed three games) or run for 100 yards in any game. Some of that had to do with a lack of opportunity: Starks didn't have more than 13 carries in any single game last season. He split reps with Ryan Grant and others but more importantly never got goal-line looks or proved he was a better option than Aaron Rodgers throwing the ball. Starks remains in Green Bay and will be a part of their rushing program, but with the Packers averaging 340 carries by running backs over the last two seasons, expectations are low for the third-year rusher. We would cautiously take him as a No. 3 running back in the event that the Packers don't bring in tough competition to take reps from him.

Jonathan Stewart, CARBye: 6

After scoring 10 rushing touchdowns in each of his first two seasons in the league, Jonathan Stewart has six rushing scores total over his last two years. And while he gained a role as the Panthers' back inside the 10-yard line for much of 2011, he only cashed in four times while finishing behind teammate DeAngelo Williams in rush attempts (Stewart had 142) and rushing yards (Stewart had 761). Where Stewart thrived was playing on third downs as an easy outlet for rookie quarterback Cam Newton, posting career-bests in receptions (47) and receiving yards (413) with a touchdown catch. That's a role he should keep in 2012, though it remains to be seen how new back Mike Tolbert will alter what's asked of him. Here's the bottom line: Stewart's been a disappointment for a couple of seasons but is in a contract year and can't be considered a lock to re-sign with the Panthers after they dropped big coin on Williams last year and a little coin on Tolbert this spring. With a strong season, Stewart will cash in with another team next spring. That's enough reason for us to eyeball him around the same time as Williams - figure Stewart to be drafted as a No. 3 option with a pick starting in Round 6.

Ben Tate, HOUBye: 8

Ben Tate remains the primary backup to Arian Foster in Houston, but last season he more than proved that he can provide stats in that role. Tate totaled 1,040 yards with four touchdowns last year, with 462 yards and two touchdowns coming in four games where he was the Texans' primary rusher. When he wasn't their main guy, he still had at least 40 total yards in seven games. Obviously, his primary value in Fantasy is as a handcuff for Foster, but he's still expected to be mildly productive even when Foster gets his work. Expect Tate to get looks from all owners, not just the folks who take Foster with a first-round pick. He's worth the pick in Round 9 or so as a backup even if you don't draft Foster.

Daniel Thomas, MIABye: 7

Daniel Thomas was expected to be the Dolphins primary rusher as a rookie in 2011, but he got off to a slow start due to hamstring problems and then watched Reggie Bush run away with the job. Thomas had just one game with double digits in Fantasy points (standard scoring) and finished the year with 165 carries for 581 yards and 12 catches for 72 yards and a touchdown. Thomas will open this season behind Bush, but he should still get the chance for plenty of touches. Thomas has obvious potential but is more like a reserve rusher for Fantasy purposes, worth drafting with a late-round pick. Bush clearly has more upside, but Thomas could end up working at the goal line. We hope he is a sophomore rebound candidate after a down rookie campaign.

Pierre Thomas, NO

Bye: 6

It's pretty clear that Pierre Thomas will remain a key cog in the Saints' backfield, but not the primary weapon. Thomas saw more playing time than expected last season, partially because of an injury to rookie Mark Ingram, and totaled 562 yards on 110 rushes and 425 yards on a career-best 50 catches. He also totaled six touchdowns, four of them coming in November and December when Ingram was out. Ingram is expected to be healthy for the Saints this season and should cut into Thomas' production, but the six-year vet is still involved in what the Saints do. But so will Ingram and Darren Sproles, and thus we can't confidently say that Thomas will be a reliable rusher from week to week, just that he'll have a chance to work in about 10 touches per contest. He cannot be drafted as anything more than a low-end No. 3/quality reserve Fantasy running back with a mid- to late-round choice. Here's an idea: If you like Thomas, make it a point to draft him along with one other Saints rusher (Sproles in Rounds 3-4 or Ingram in Rounds 8-10) on Draft Day.

Mike Tolbert, CAR

Mike Tolbert made an interesting career move this offseason when he signed a four-year deal in Carolina, leaving the Chargers. Tolbert, who is familiar with the offense in Carolina thanks to his days with offensive guru Rob Chudzinski, is expected to play more as a fullback rather than a running back since the Panthers are loaded at tailback with DeAngelo Williams and Jonathan Stewart. That doesn't mean Tolbert won't touch the ball, but his ability to help Fantasy owners just got a lot worse. Tolbert, who had 303 carries for 1,325 yards and 19 touchdowns and 79 catches for 649 yards and two touchdowns the past two years, might just become a glorified goal-line back and occasional weapon. He went from a potential No. 2 Fantasy running back to a low-end reserve. Tolbert is still worth drafting with a late-round pick, but as long as Williams and Stewart are healthy, we aren't going to see Tolbert doing much compared to how he was used with the Chargers.

Robert Turbin, SEA

Bye: 11

The Seahawks took Utah State running back Robert Turbin with a fourth-round pick in the NFL Draft, and they might need him right away. Starter Marshawn Lynch was arrested in mid-July and is likely to serve a suspension. Turbin could be in the mix to help replace him. The rookie missed all of the 2010 season with a torn right ACL but bounced back in 2011 by rushing for 1,517 yards and 19 touchdowns. Turbin doesn't have ridiculous speed but for a big guy he's not bad. He's worth a middle- to late-round pick in seasonal leagues as a handcuff for Lynch, a middle-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a second- or third-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Michael Turner, ATL

Bye: 7

off against a decimated Bucs team in Week 17. But he'll still be the main rusher in the Falcons offense and play with a unit that has such a great passing threat that he'll never see eight defenders in the box. A slightly improved schedule should help too. We think Turner is in the mix as a low-end No. 1/high-end No. 2 Fantasy RB worth a pick in Round 2 in standard drafts and closer to Round 3 in PPR formats.

Shane Vereen, NE

Bye: 9

Shane Vereen barely got the chance to play as a rookie in 2011, but that should change this year. He has the chance to be a key contributor for the Patriots this season with BenJarvus Green-Ellis gone to Cincinnati and should share time with Stevan Ridley, Joseph Addai and Danny Woodhead. Ridley should be the best rusher of this trio, but Vereen will have his moments also. He has the chance to be a change-of-pace rusher behind Ridley and Addai and also work in passing situations with Woodhead. We consider Vereen a key Fantasy reserve, and he is worth drafting with a late-round pick. He should be drafted after Ridley but before Woodhead if you're ranking them going into training camp.

Leon Washington will likely begin the season helping the Seattle run game out as Marshawn Lynch is expected to serve a suspension. Beanie Wells, ARI

Bye: 10

Beanie Wells is hoping to build off his breakout 2011 season with another strong performance this year. In 14 games, Wells totaled 1,097 total yards and 10 touchdowns and was the No. 15 running back in standard Fantasy leagues. What makes his feat more impressive is that he did it with a knee injury, one that required surgery this offseason. The Cardinals believe Wells will be ready for camp but it remains to be seen if that will be the case. Though second-year rusher Ryan Williams is sure to take some reps off of Wells' plate, the belief is that Wells will be the primary rusher for Arizona, including at the goal line. We consider Wells a No. 2 Fantasy running back coming into the season worth drafting around Round 3 or 4 in all leagues -- so long as he's cleared for camp.

DeAngelo Williams, CAR

Bye: 6

Last year DeAngelo Williams had to share the rushing workload with one guy. This year he might have to end up splitting with two guys -- and that doesn't include quarterback Cam Newton. Williams totaled seven touchdowns and averaged an awesome 5.4 yards per carry, but he did it with just 155 carries. He rushed for more than 100 yards once, totaled more than 100 yards twice and only six times did he accrue 10 or more Fantasy points in a game (standard scoring), with most of his big games coming after Week 10 (six of his seven touchdowns came in his final six matchups). If you think Williams was a headache to figure out last year, just wait until you see split reps with not only Jonathan Stewart but with Mike Tolbert, too. Williams' rushing average will benefit, and he might last a few years longer in the league, but with only a handful of chances to get even 15 touches per game last year, the expectation is that he won't put up big stats week after week. It's safe to draft Williams as a No. 3 Fantasy running back worth a pick starting in Round 6 or 7.

Ryan Williams, ARI

Bye: 10

Ryan Williams was expected to compete with Beanie Wells for the starting job in 2011 before a preseason knee injury ruined his rookie year. Now he's set for the same competition in 2012, rehabbed fully from the torn patella tendon injury he suffered last August. Williams was not on the Cardinals' PUP list when camp opened while Wells was, though Wells should be ready to roll when the games count. We suspect Williams will take some carries away from Wells, but Wells established himself as a featured rusher in 2011 and shouldn't be off the field a ton. Still, Williams has good talent, and if he can return at 100 percent he is worth drafting in all leagues with a mid-to-late pick, either as a handcuff to Beanie Wells or as a quality reserve with potential to see some productive playing time.

David Wilson, NYG

Bye: 11

Virginia Tech running back David Wilson was the first-round pick of the Giants, bolstering their running back corps. Wilson offers plenty of variety after rushing for 1.627 yards and nine touchdowns last season with the Hokies, adding 21 grabs for 126 yards and another score. He's also worked returning kickoffs, scoring on two of his 22 returns in 2010 (none on 20 returns in 2011). Wilson collected 4,349 all-purpose yards and scored 25 touchdowns in only three seasons at Virginia Tech and should contribute right away on special teams for the Giants. He also can offer a change-of-pace option to the ground game behind starter Ahmad Bradshaw. But unless (or until) Bradshaw misses significant playing time, Wilson isn't expected to post enough stats to warrant Fantasy use. We'd spend a late pick on him in seasonal drafts, a middle- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a Top 20 pick in rookie-only formats.

Danny Woodhead, NE

Bye: 9

Danny Woodhead had a breakout season in 2010 and then took a dramatic step back in 2011. This year, Woodhead has the chance for a rebound season since he should have a prominent role in New England's four-headed backfield with Stevan Ridley, Joseph Addai and Shane Vereen. Woodhead had more than 900 total yards and six touchdowns in 2010, but his production regressed last year to just over 500 total yards and one touchdown. With BenJarvus Green-Ellis now in Cincinnati, Woodhead should see more playing time, especially in passing situations. We'd rank him behind Ridley and possibly behind Addai and Vereen as well, but Woodhead has the chance to help owners in PPR leagues. He should not be drafted in most standard formats, but in PPR leagues he is worth a late-round pick.

Danny Amendola, STL

Bye: 9

Danny Amendola entered 2011 with plenty of potential, but an elbow injury in Week 1 ended his season prematurely. Now, Amendola will have to prove he's healthy and bounce back in 2012. He's still dealing with the elbow injury in the offseason and he has to get a new contract as a restricted free agent. But since he will remain with the Rams, he should once again have a prominent role. The addition of Steve Smith (formerly of the Giants and Eagles) could cut into his playing time, but Amendola should be considered a No. 4 Fantasy option in standard leagues and a No. 3 option in PPR formats. Keep in mind that in 2010 when he was healthy he had 85 catches for 689 yards and three touchdowns and he could easily reach those stats again this year.

Miles Austin, DAL

Miles Austin has proven that when healthy he is among the best receivers in the NFL. He has 26 total touchdowns in the past three years, but he only played in 10 games last year due to various injuries including a key one to his hamstring. He should be 100 percent for this season, and he has the chance for a big year. The last time he played a full year with Tony Romo was in 2009 (remember Romo was limited in 2010 with a broken collarbone) and the two hooked up for 81 catches, 1,320 yards and 11 touchdowns. Austin is capable of those stats again, and he should be drafted as early as Round 4 in the majority of leagues as a very solid No. 2 Fantasy receiver. Dez Bryant and Jason Witten will continue to steal targets from Austin, but the loss of Laurent Robinson as a free agent to Jacksonville should help Austin gain the kind of target totals we hoped for last year.

Doug Baldwin, SEA

Doug Baldwin was Seattle's best receiver in 2011 with 51 catches for 788 yards and four touchdowns. Not bad for an undrafted rookie! He took advantage of several injuries and saw a lot of playing time, but now he'll have to compete for snaps with the likes of Sidney Rice and Golden Tate. Expectations should remain small -- it wouldn't be a total surprise if he matched his numbers from last season but it would be a huge shock if he grossly exceeded them given the deep receiving corps the Seahawks have. Draft him late as a reserve receiver if you wish, but don't be committed to keeping him if he falters out of the gate. He might wind up being a receiver used as a one-week replacement off waivers during the season.

Jon Baldwin, KC

Bye: 7

Jon Baldwin would like a do-over from his rookie year in 2011. Baldwin missed the first six games of the season due to a thumb injury and then struggled through poor quarterback play with Matt Cassel (broken hand) out. He finished the year with 21 catches for 254 yards and a touchdown, but he's capable of so much more. He should start this season opposite Dwayne Bowe, and Baldwin has plenty of sleeper potential. He is not worth drafting as anything more than a late-round flier, but he has good size at 6-foot-4, 230 pounds and decent speed. If Cassel can look his way with enough red-zone targets he could be a serviceable No. 3 receiver.

Earl Bennett, CHI

Bye: 6

For the second year in a row, Earl Bennett looked poised to break out as the Bears' top receiver but didn't follow through. After suffering a rib injury against the hard-hitting Saints, Bennett caught 14 balls for 251 yards and a touchdown over three weeks. But he couldn't find the end zone or crack even 50 yards receiving in the six games thereafter. We like that he's a favorite of quarterback Jay Cutler and could see him playing regularly in the Bears offense, but until we see him sustain consistent production, he'll be nothing more than a reserve Fantasy option. Draft him with a late-round pick if you'd like.

Davone Bess, MIA

Bye: 7

The Dolphins receiver situation is so dire entering the season that Davone Bess is likely their No. 1 option in the passing game. While Bess is a decent slot receiver, he is far from a No. 1 threat. The good news for Fantasy owners is if Bess is the Dolphins' top guy then he could be a No. 3 Fantasy receiver, especially in PPR leagues. He does have at least 75 catches in two of his past three seasons. But Bess has just 11 total touchdowns, and he will probably struggle when he faces top corners. Potentially working with a rookie quarterback doesn't help either. If Miami does not add another receiver then consider drafting Bess as a sleeper with a middle- to late-round pick. But if Miami drafts a receiver or signs someone significant prior to training camp then Bess would only be worth drafting with a late-round pick in PPR formats.

Justin Blackmon, JAC

Bye: 6

Oklahoma State wide receiver Justin Blackmon was taken with the fifth overall pick in the 2012 NFL Draft by the Jaguars. The 6-foot-1, 207-pound dynamo scored 38 touchdowns in his final 25 games and caught 244 passes for 3,378 yards in his collegiate career (35 games). Catching darts from Brandon Weeden, Blackmon set an NCAA record with at least 100 yards and one touchdown in all 12 games in a season in 2010 and won two consecutive Fred Biletnikoff awards as the top college wide receiver. He's a much-needed receiving threat for the Jaguars and young passer Blaine Gabbert. Blackmon is fast, big and strong, a tough combination for a defensive back to match up with. He should be a positive for Gabbert, which in turn means he'll post some pretty good numbers. An early June arrest for a DUI, his second in 20 months, might scare off some owners but no suspension is expected. A nice start to the preseason has garnered him some attention making him worthy of a late-round pick in seasonal drafts, a middle-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a Top-10 pick in rookie-only formats.

Anquan Boldin, BAL

Bye: 8

Anquan Boldin used to be considered a borderline No. 1 Fantasy wide receiver -- now he's a borderline No. 1 receiver on his own team. Boldin caught 57 of the 105 passes thrown his way (54 percent) for 887 yards (a career-best 15.6 yards per catch) but just three touchdowns, his lowest total since his injury-shortened second season. By comparison, teammate Torrey Smith caught 50 of 95 targeted passes for 841 yards and seven scores. Boldin will remain a big part of the Ravens offense, but he might just be the league's best possession receiver. That's not a bad thing for his career but it's not exactly great for his Fantasy prospects. Maybe it's because he's playing with a non-elite quarterback or because he's on a team with a stellar run game, but Boldin simply isn't the same type of stat producer as he was with Arizona from 2003 to 2009. With Smith only getting better and the Ravens offense basically coming back intact, Boldin cannot be overvalued on Draft Day. He's a solid No. 3 Fantasy receiver in PPR formats and more of a middle-of-the-pack No. 3 receiver in standard leagues. He'll likely start getting some looks in early Round 7.

Dwayne Bowe, KC

Bye: 7

Dwayne Bowe received the franchise tag from the Chiefs and will play on the one-year deal this season after missing all of the offseason workouts and training camp. He reported on Aug. 17. The hope here is that the motivation of a new deal will help him have a strong season. Bowe was a bust in 2011 compared to 2010, scoring five touchdowns -- 10 fewer than he did the year prior -- but still getting 81 receptions for 1,159 yards. We figure Bowe's touchdown expectation is somewhere in the middle since he played nearly half his games in 2011 without Matt Cassel (broken hand) and didn't have a chance to be a dominant end zone threat. Cassel's back and Bowe has plenty to play for. Thus, Bowe should be considered a No. 2 Fantasy receiver you might end up settling for with a pick between Rounds 5 and 7.

Kenny Britt, TEN

Bye: 11

Titans head coach Mike Munchak summed up Kenny Britt this offseason as a "phenom." After this offseason, there wasn't much phenomenal about him -- but he'll have the chance to reclaim his glory this season. Britt was suspended one game by the NFL for violating the league's personal conduct policy when he was arrested for driving drunk at an Army base in July. But that's small potatoes compared to the rehab and recovery from three knee procedures since last September when he tore his ACL. Britt has big potential given what we've seen from him in the past but questions about his health make him a risk in Fantasy. But because his suspension will only last one game, there's a realistic chance he'll contribute sooner than later for the Titans. We'd spend a mid-round pick on Britt.

Antonio Brown, PITBye: 4

Antonio Brown was one of our favorite sleepers last summer and he didn't disappoint. Now the onus is on him to improve after the Steelers' opponents have had an offseason to study him, and do it after landing a five-year contract extension that puts a lot of money in his pocket. Brown caught 69 of 123 passes thrown his way, generating 1,108 yards (an awesome 16.1 average), but with just two touchdowns. If Brown stays as productive as a receiver and can pick up some extra touchdowns, he'll be among the Top 20 receivers in Fantasy Football -- and no one is drafting him that way. Figure Brown to begin 2012 as a No. 3 Fantasy receiver worth a pick starting in Round 6 in PPR formats and Round 7 in standard formats.

Dez Bryant, DALBye: 5

Despite his stats not being to the level that some expect, Dez Bryant looks like a franchise receiver. He has the chance for a big year in 2012, his third season in the NFL which is when many receivers have a breakout campaign. Bryant had a solid 2011 with 63 catches for 928 yards and nine touchdowns, finishing as a Top 20 Fantasy receiver. He wasn't very consistent until the end of the season, but that's one of several things he's worked on this offseason, promising he's quicker and stronger after injuries seemingly limited him. Bryant was arrested in mid-July for shoving his mother but no charges were filed, and he suffered some patellar tendinitis in his knee in mid-August. Neither issue should keep him off the field, and with the Cowboys' receiving corps at less than 100 percent headed into the season, Bryant could be asked to serve as the go-to playmaker. As anyone familiar with Bryant knows, there's some serious potential here. Plan on drafting Bryant as early as Round 5 in the majority of leagues as a solid No. 2 Fantasy receiver.

Nate Burleson, DETBye: 5

Nate Burleson caught a career-best 73 passes in 2011, but averaged a career-worst 10.4 yards per catch. But the biggest disappointment? He had just three touchdowns in a year where his quarterback threw 41. Four other players including two tight ends had more and a running back that joined the team in Week 10 had as many. With Calvin Johnson owning the No. 1 job and Titus Young a candidate for more playing time, it might not be such a good idea to invest in Burleson outside of the late rounds of a PPR draft.

Randall Cobb, GBBye: 10

Randall Cobb's rookie season hit a high in Week 1 when he returned a kickoff 108 yards for a score against the Saints and also caught a 32-yard touchdown pass from Aaron Rodgers in the game. From there, he did very little, failing to score over the next 15 games. But that might have been a byproduct of playing in an offense loaded with talent as a first-year player. There's obvious potential in Cobb because of his speed, but until he sees more playing time, he's not going to be anything more than a late-round flier in standard-league drafts. He'll go higher in leagues that reward special teams play.

Marques Colston, NOBye: 6

Want consistency? Marques Colston's got it. Despite a few nagging injuries that have kept him off the field for all but two of his years, Colston has had over 1,000 yards receiving, at least seven touchdowns and at least 70 receptions in five of six NFL seasons (he was limited in 2008). With a career average of 72.5 receiving yards per game (he averaged 81.6 last year) and a score every 9.35 receptions, Colston remains a quality Fantasy receiver who can start as a rock-solid No. 2 option from week to week. Expect him to be a good value as a late Round 4 or early Round 5 pick.

Michael Crabtree, SFBye: 9

Michael Crabtree has plenty of talent, but he has yet to show that he can be a reliable Fantasy receiver. In 2011, which was Crabtree's third year in the NFL, he had a successful campaign with career highs in catches (72) and yards (874), but he scored just four touchdowns and had only four games with double digits in Fantasy points (standard scoring). His quarterback situation didn't help since Alex Smith isn't exactly a premier passer, and the 49ers decided to upgrade at receiver this offseason. They added Mario Manningham from the Giants and also signed Randy Moss out of retirement and drafted Illinois wideout A.J. Jenkins with a late first-round pick. Crabtree now has plenty of competition for catches, and his Fantasy value will take a hit as a result. He should be viewed as a reserve Fantasy receiver worth a late-round pick.

Victor Cruz, NYGBye: 11

Victor Cruz made salsa dancing cool for Fantasy owners in 2011 when he had 82 catches for a franchise-record 1,536 yards and nine touchdowns during the regular season and then added 21 more catches for 269 yards and a touchdown in the playoffs to help the Giants win the Super Bowl. He came out of nowhere to become the Giants' leading receiver during the season, but can he do it again? We're cautiously optimistic. It's never a great idea to rely on unproven receivers with one year of success, but Cruz is in a great situation. He has an elite quarterback in Eli Manning (who loved throwing to him - 131 times in the regular season, to be exact), he will remain a starter who will learn to overcome double-teams this summer with Hakeem Nicks sidelined for most of camp, and he's in a contract year. All of those factors add up to Cruz being a solid Fantasy option worth drafting as early as Round 3 or 4 in the majority of leagues.

Eric Decker, DEN

If you thought Eric Decker played well before, then you're going to be giddy about Decker this season with the addition of Peyton Manning. Decker had six games with double digits in Fantasy points last year with 44 catches for 612 yards and eight touchdowns, and it would not be a surprise for his production to increase by 30-plus catches and 300-plus yards playing with Manning. The receiver was among the first Broncos to begin working out with Manning this offseason and should be on the same page with the quarterback when the season starts. Go ahead and consider Decker a No. 3 Fantasy receiver on Draft Day, making him worth a pick in Round 7. But there's obvious potential here so long as Manning is the one throwing him passes. Keep in mind this is also Decker's third year in the NFL, which is when receivers tend to blossom.

Larry Fitzgerald, ARI

All Larry Fitzgerald does is make plays. It doesn't matter if he's catching passes from Kurt Warner or John Skelton, he continues to post outstanding stats. Fitzgerald struggled through a quarterback mess in 2011 with Skelton and Kevin Kolb but still managed 80 catches for 1,411 yards and eight touchdowns. It was his lowest reception total since 2006, but this was the third time he reached at least 1,400 receiving yards. Kolb and Skelton are back again competing for the job this year but as of late August it appeared Skelton had the edge, which is good for Fitzgerald since he had better numbers with him last year than with Kolb. The Cardinals added rookie receiver Michael Floyd to help draw some coverage away from Fitzgerald but he hasn't panned out quite as well as planned. The bottom line is that Fitzgerald remains a No. 1 Fantasy receiver in all leagues worth drafting as early as Round 2.

Malcom Floyd, SD

Malcom Floyd is entering a contract year this season and could be in line for a big year now that Vincent Jackson is gone. Floyd could emerge as the No. 1 receiver for the Chargers, which is a role he played for much of 2010 when Jackson was a holdout. Floyd had 24 catches for 513 yards and three touchdowns during the first six games of 2010 with Jackson out. He's also averaged nearly 20 yards per catch over his last two seasons (23 games). But while Floyd does have promise this year, there's still some downside. He's injury prone since he missed nine games the past two years. And the Chargers added Robert Meachem and Eddie Royal this offseason to help Floyd and Antonio Gates with Jackson's departure. We like Floyd as a good reserve receiver to start the year, and there's obvious potential so long as he stays healthy. Just don't pencil him in to start for you every week since he could be limited, and he could also be overshadowed by Meachem and Gates. Floyd is only worth drafting with a late-round pick.

Michael Floyd, ARI

Notre Dame wideout Michael Floyd was the top pick of the Cardinals, but playing time could be hard for him to come by after a tough offseason and training camp where he couldn't quite crack the first-string offense. Floyd's got the size (6-foot-3, 220 pounds) and speed (4.43 seconds in the 40-yard dash) to be an impact receiver, though questions about his preparations this summer have tempered those projections. Floyd caught 100 passes for 1,147 yards and nine TD catches, plus one touchdown run, as a senior in school. Expect him to eventually see a good amount of playing time and especially help draw coverage away from Fitzgerald, but it might not happen right away. Because of that and his quarterback issues in Arizona, we see Floyd as a Fantasy reserve worth a pick late in seasonal formats. He's a late first/early second-round pick in rookie-only drafts and a middle- to late-round choice in dynasty/keeper formats.

Jacoby Ford, OAK

Jacoby Ford is entering his third year in the NFL, and we hope it leads to a breakout season eventually. But for now, he's sidelined with a sprained left foot suffered in mid-August. Ford played well as a rookie in 2010 with 25 catches for 470 yards and two touchdowns and 10 carries for 155 yards and two touchdowns. He also made an impact in the return game with 53 kick returns for 1,280 yards and three touchdowns. But last year, Ford struggled with (surprise!) a foot injury and was limited to 19 catches for 279 yards and one touchdown and four carries for 31 yards. He also had only 11 kickoff returns for 341 yards and one touchdown. With Ford's foot already an issue this preseason chances are he won't be useful to begin the season and thus not worth drafting. You should be able to land him off waivers during the season if he begins to show signs of breaking out.

Bye: 10

For four years, Pierre Garcon stood in the shadow of Reggie Wayne as the No. 2 receiver in Indianapolis. In 2012, he'll get his chance to stand out as the top dog in the Redskins offense. Garcon signed a rich deal with Washington and should see plenty of playing time in Mike Shanahan's West Coast offense catching passes from rookie Robert Griffin III. Shanahan said this offseason that he loves Garcon's playmaking ability and speed after the catch, and both will come in handy with Griffin at the helm. The team did take steps this offseason to improve its receiving corps, which means that there are a lot of mouths to feed in the Nation's Capital. Garcon is coming off a season with career-highs set or matched across the board, and it came with very mediocre quarterbacks. Garcon should be able to get close to his 2011 numbers again and serves owners as a borderline No. 3/reserve Fantasy receiver worth taking in Round 8 or 9.

The Browns used their second-round pick in the 2013 NFL Draft to select wide receiver Josh Gordon in the NFL Supplemental Draft on Thursday. A 6-foot-3, 225-pound receiver who transferred from Baylor to Utah but never played with the Utes, Gordon has great raw skills but some significant off-field issues including getting kicked off of Baylor's football team for testing positive for marijuana. After catching one 7-yard pass in 2009, Gordon hauled in 42 passes for 714 yards (17.0 avg.) and seven touchdowns in 2010. He's certain to make Cleveland's final roster cut unless he gets hurt in camp, though, so there's some potential for him to carve out a role at some point this season. He's worth taking with a late-round gamble in deeper dynasty/keeper leagues and rookie-only drafts but shouldn't be considered a viable option for 2012 play.

A.J. Green, CIN

Bye: 8

We knew A.J. Green had talent and potential, but we didn't think we'd see him show it right from the get-go. Green had at least eight Fantasy points (standard scoring) in 11 of his 15 starts and finished his rookie season with 65 grabs for 1,057 yards (16.3 avg.) and seven touchdowns. How can he improve for 2012? For starters, he could catch more of the passes Andy Dalton throws his way - he caught only 56 percent of his targets (116) last year. That should happen as Dalton and Green go through their first offseason together and get even more familiar with each other. But what remains to be seen is how the Bengals approach replacing Jerome Simpson, who left the team for Minnesota. The likes of Armon Binns, Mohamed Sanu and tight end Jermaine Gresham will be asked to take some pressure off of Green this year, but defenses will surely key in on Green and make it a little harder for him to succeed. But we're of the belief Green has the potential to be an elite receiver and won't diminish him as a game breaker even though he'll be targeted by opponents. Expect Green to perform about as well as he did last year with more potential for him to improve than regress. Draft him as a middle- to low-end No. 1 Fantasy receiver worth a pick starting in late Round 3.

Leonard Hankerson, WAS

Bye: 10

Leonard Hankerson is ready for the start of the season after suffering a torn labrum in his hip last November and undergoing surgery and rehab. Hankerson has a ton of upside, but the Redskins have a crowded receiving corps now with Santana Moss, Pierre Garcon and Josh Morgan among others on the team. Playing time could be a question mark even though he's clearly the big boy of the group. We can see Hankerson slotting in as the No. 3 receiver and working in specific jump-ball situations, but his targets will be minimal by comparison to other Redskins wideouts. Plan on drafting Hankerson only in dynasty and keeper formats with a late-round pick.

Percy Harvin, MIN

Bye: 11

His headaches and other injuries might make him a pain to trust in Fantasy, but no one can argue with Harvin's production through three seasons. The versatile receiver totaled over 1,300 yards last year with career-bests in total touchdowns (eight) and catches (87). He got a great boost late in the season, when he scored seven of those touchdowns in his final seven games, so he ended the year red hot. While his receiving average has fallen off from year to year, his reception totals have jumped, and in 2011 his rushing production was really impressive with new coordinator Bill Musgrave (345 yards on 52 carries). And while he's labeled as "injury prone," he's only missed three games in three years. Harvin's upside is good enough to make him a low-end No. 1/high-end No. 2 Fantasy WR worth a pick in late Round 3 but likely to be had in late Round 4 or early Round 5. He should be a tremendous value.

Devery Henderson, NO

Bye: 6

Devery Henderson might land a slightly larger role in the Saints' offense this season with Robert Meachem off to San Diego, but expectations remain minimal. He had 100 yards and scored in each of the Saints' first two games in 2011, then totaled 300 yards with zero end-zone visits the rest of the season. Not only should he not be drafted, but he's a risk to use as anything more than a one-week replacement off waivers.

Devin Hester, CHI

Bye: 6

This could be Devin Hester's make-or-break season at receiver. He regressed in 2011, scoring once and catching just five passes for more than 20 yards. He dealt with an ankle injury toward the end of the season, and that might have hampered him a little, but in four years of work as a receiver he's caught 174 passes for 2,266 yards and 11 touchdowns. Sounds like being a breakout just isn't in the cards for him. We dig Hester in leagues where special-teams production counts with a middle- to late-round pick, but he's not worth taking in standard drafts.

Darrius Heyward-Bey, OAK

Bye: 5

Darrius Heyward-Bey proved that his third year in the NFL was his breakout campaign, and he's hoping to build off his performance with a strong year in 2012. Coming into 2011, Heyward-Bey had 35 catches for 490 yards and two touchdowns for his career. But last year he had 64 grabs for 975 yards and four touchdowns, and that includes being barely involved in a couple of games because of issues related to former head coach Hue Jackson. Spending a full offseason with new quarterback Carson Palmer should help Heyward-Bey, and he just needs to play at a consistent level since Oakland has a crowded receiving corps with Denarius Moore, Jacoby Ford and upstart rookie Rod Streater on staff. We can see Heyward-Bey having some big weeks (he had three games in 2011 with at least 15 Fantasy points) and disappearing in others (he had four Fantasy points or less in six games last year). Because of that, he should be considered a quality reserve receiver in the majority of leagues worth a middle- to late-round pick.

Stephen Hill, NYJ

Bye: 9

The Jets took Georgia Tech wide receiver Stephen Hill with a second-round pick in the 2012 NFL Draft. The 6-foot-4, 215-pound behemoth didn't post a lot of stats in the Yellow Jackets' run-heavy offense but finished his three-year college career with 49 catches for 1,248 yards (16th in school history) and an average of 25.5 yards per catch. He scored nine times. Hill might be considered raw in large part because he hasn't played a lot and hasn't put up a lot of stats, but the straight-line speed he's displayed (4.36 in the 40-yard dash) combined with his massive body and strength make him a potential superstar in the NFL. There's risk that he could take a while to develop, and the Jets might have taken him just as much for his run-blocking ability as for his receiving potential, but at least he landed on a roster where he has a chance to get fast-tracked to the starting lineup (if only he had a quarterback). He's not worth a pick in seasonal formats but should be taken with a middle- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a Top 30 pick in rookie-only drafts.

Santonio Holmes, NYJ

Bye: 9

Santonio Holmes has a long way to go before Fantasy owners can trust him again. Holmes was benched during the season-finale in 2011 at Miami and teammates called him a "cancer" soon thereafter. He reportedly had problems with Mark Sanchez, but the two have apparently mended the fences this offseason and worked out together before training camp. However once camp started Holmes took on several small injuries including a shot to the ribs and a sore back, limiting his preparation time. Tack on the Jets turning to a more run-based offense that includes the addition of inaccurate quarterback Tim Tebow lining up under center and Holmes will be hard pressed to perform. He had decent stats in 2011 thanks to his eight touchdowns, but the 51 catches for 654 yards that came with it disappointed people because he's capable of so much more. We would draft him as a quality backup if we could with a mid- to late-round pick to be safe, but keep in mind Holmes is capable of 60-plus catches, 800-plus yards and at least six touchdowns, so there is some upside to him.

DeSean Jackson, PHI

Bye: 7

DeSean Jackson is ready for a rebound year after what turned out to be a frustrating 2011. Last year, Jackson was drafted as a No. 1 Fantasy receiver in Round 3, but he barely finished in the Top 30 at his position. He had some monster games -- six outings with double digits in Fantasy points, including two in a row to close the season -- but he struggled early on as contract-related issues made things icy between him and his coaches on and off the field. He got a new five-year deal this offseason worth $51 million, and coach Andy Reid is confident he will play up to his potential. Jackson himself says he's focused on football and is glad to have a new deal. He now presents great value on Draft Day since he should fall to Round 5 or later, making him a potential steal. Though he should be classified as a 'boom or bust' receiver, Jackson can be considered a low-end No. 2 Fantasy option with upside.

Vincent Jackson, TB

Bye: 5

Vincent Jackson finally got the payday he's been waiting years for with a five-year deal worth $55.55 million from the Bucs. That's great for him, but it could hurt his Fantasy value. He goes from the pass-happy offense in San Diego with Philip Rivers to what should be a more balanced offense in Tampa Bay with Josh Freeman. And as good as Jackson has been, he's wildly inconsistent. He had 60 catches for 1,106 yards and nine touchdowns in 2011, but he managed just six games with double digits in Fantasy points (standard scoring). He had seven games with four Fantasy points or less, and those games could happen more often than not with the change in offense and quarterback. We still consider Jackson a No. 2 Fantasy receiver, but he should not be drafted until Round 5 or 6.

The Bears selected South Carolina wideout Alshon Jeffery with a second-round pick. Jeffery has tremendous size at 6-foot-3 and around 220 pounds, but doesn't play with break-away speed even though he ran around 4.5 seconds in the 40-yard dash. Jeffery looked great collecting his statistics against out-sized college defenders, totaling 179 career receptions for 2,894 yards (16.2 per catch) and 22 touchdowns. He's got great hands to go with his size and should be able to compete for significant playing time this summer and might have a chance at 40 catches this season and around 60 in future seasons. He's worth a late pick in deeper seasonal drafts, a mid-to-late pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a second-round choice in rookie-only formats.

Greg Jennings, GBBye: 10

Despite failing to record 1,000 yards for the first time in five seasons, Greg Jennings remains a No. 1 Fantasy wideout with the Packers. He did, however, score nine times, and would have easily hit 1,000 yards receiving last year if not for a knee injury sidelining him for the final three games of the season. Jennings remains Aaron Rodgers' top target, which means he'll receive his fair share of double-teams, but he'll also remain productive. He had at least 10 Fantasy points nine times in 13 games (standard scoring). Tack on a contract year coming up for the speedster and you're looking at a huge season potentially. Jennings will be taken in Round 2 in the majority of leagues. A preseason concussion is cause for little concern for now.

Andre Johnson, HOUBye: 8

Obviously, Andre Johnson has the reputation of being an elite Fantasy receiver for good reason, but there's some concern that he could be more of a liability than a stud. From 2007 to 2009, Johnson had at least eight touchdowns per season and averaged 97.4 receiving yards per game. But in his last two years that average dropped to 85.4 yards per game with 10 touchdowns in 20 starts. Obviously a huge factor for the drop-off is due to injuries, but that's the point. Johnson has missed considerable time with leg injuries over the last two years (three games in 2010 and nine in 2011) and revealed in May that he had arthroscopic knee surgery after hyperextending a knee late last season. Then in early August he missed a week of camp with a groin tweak. Johnson will enter his 10th season at the age of 31, and at a time when the league is morphing into being more pass-happy than ever, younger receivers are putting up bigger stats -- especially in the touchdown department where Johnson has never had more than nine. He's got a solid schedule in front of him and he's still a No. 1 Fantasy receiver, but he needs to stay healthy to live up to the billing. We expect Johnson to get drafted toward the middle of Round 2 in all formats.

Calvin Johnson, DETBye: 5

Take everything you know about Calvin Johnson -- the amazing size, the deep speed, the great hands, the awesome receiving average, the 1,100-plus-yard, 12-plus touchdown production in each of his last three 16-game seasons -- and then factor in this: He's finally got a healthy quarterback in Matthew Stafford. Over his last 48 games he scored and/or had 100 yards in 28 of them (13 of 17 in 2011), a huge percentage compared to his peers. We know you're drafting Megatron anyway, but you can feel a little better about it knowing that Johnson should remain a star even after getting a rich pay day this offseason. He's a lock to be a Top 10 pick in all drafts this summer and could go Top 5 in PPR formats.

Steve Johnson, BUFBye: 8

Fantasy owners expected Steve Johnson to be a bust in 2011 after his breakout performance in 2010, but he established himself as a pretty good receiver and earned a five-year, $36 million contract extension in March. Some think Johnson will slack off after getting paid, but Johnson has posted solid stats in consecutive years with 158 catches, 2,077 yards and 17 touchdowns over that span, and he is clearly the No. 1 option in Buffalo's passing game (135 targets in 2011). He should continue to catch plenty of passes and post quality production, and we consider him a low-end No. 2 Fantasy receiver. He should be drafted around Round 5 or 6 in all leagues.

James Jones, GBBye: 10

James Jones came back to the Packers last season, but his stats didn't perk up even though his contract did. Jones did post a career-best seven touchdowns in 2011, but that was good for only fourth-best on the team. He caught fewer passes in 2011 for a slight downtick in yardage, but the point is that he didn't break out like some might have believed. We think Jones is set for a limited role in the offense and thus shouldn't be trusted in Fantasy leagues to begin the season unless he's traded to a team where he'll get some more playing time.

Julio Jones, ATLBye: 7

We saw some big flashes of what Julio Jones could do as a rookie, and now the expectations are sky-high for him heading into 2012. A hamstring injury limited Jones early on in the year and cost him three games but once he got past that he was amazing, finishing with 373 yards and six touchdowns in his final four regular-season games. Owners will hope for big games like the ones he ended the year with for Jones, but the reality is that he'll be hit or miss as defenses choose who to cover from week to week between him and Roddy White. Don't let that discourage you, however -- it is crystal clear that Jones is a very talented receiver who should start coming into his own in 2012. With his preseason play beyond our wildest dreams, Jones has already taken the mantle from White as the more valuable Falcons receiver and is worth a Top 20 pick in all leagues.

Jeremy Kerley was someone to put on your watch list, but a slow training camp that included a hamstring injury has made him unappealing. Brandon LaFell, CARBye: 6

This could be the year Brandon LaFell breaks out for the Panthers. His yardage and touchdown production rose in his second year (613 yards, three touchdowns), as did his playing time. With his reps and workload expected to increase again in 2012, his numbers should follow. Here's the best part: LaFell will work in the same offense as last season with a dynamic quarterback in Cam Newton and opposite stud receiver Steve Smith. We could see the 6-foot-2 wideout take advantage of single coverage quite a bit as he progresses, and he could be a third-year breakout. He's one to watch this preseason - if he gets a lot of reps with the first-team offense, he'll be a candidate to play well. We wouldn't argue with owners who take LaFell with a late-round pick, but even if he goes undrafted owners could find him valuable off waivers as at the very least a one-week replacement.

Greg Little, CLEBye: 10

Expectations remain high for Browns receiver Greg Little despite him struggling for much of his rookie year. Little scored twice in 16 games, totaling a respectable 709 yards on a more-than-respectable 61 catches. But he also was targeted a whopping 121 times (basically a 50 percent conversion rate), was credited for a slew of drops and had just six catches for more than 20 yards. Little should remain a key figure of the Browns offense, and an offseason of work should help him progress. The Browns addressed the quarterback situation with the addition of Brandon Weeden, and he'll help a little, but Little is no better than a quality reserve Fantasy option with the potential to excel into a No. 3 role in 2012. We wouldn't take him until Round 8 or 9 the earliest.

Brandon Lloyd, NEBye: 9

Brandon Lloyd has followed offensive coordinator Josh McDaniels again -- this time to New England, where he'll work in the Patriots' high-powered offense. Lloyd had 51 catches for 683 yards and five scores last year in 11 games in St. Louis when McDaniels was the offensive coordinator, and that came on the heels of a 77-catch, 1,448-yard, 11-touchdown season with McDaniels in Denver. The benefit to being with McDaniels this time around is Lloyd has an elite quarterback in Tom Brady. The negative: he'll have to share Brady's attention with Wes Welker, Rob Gronkowski and Aaron Hernandez. But Lloyd and Brady have developed their rapport quickly and could be in line to connect early and often this season as defenses are forced to cover everyone in the New England offense. We consider Lloyd a No. 2 Fantasy receiver with upside to potentially finish as a No. 1 option as he did in 2010. Plan on drafting him with a pick as early as Round 5, though Round 6 might be a touch safer.

Jeremy Maclin, PHIBye: 7

Injuries bugged Jeremy Maclin from the start of last season, but he still pieced together a good year. He had five games with double digits in Fantasy points (standard scoring) in 13 outings (shoulder and hamstring problems robbed him of three games). What to remember about Maclin is that he has 15 touchdowns in his last two seasons -- 29 games -- and has been incredibly consistent in his catches and yardage per catch in that time. With seven pounds of muscle added to his frame and no injuries to worry about, Maclin might be on the verge of a breakout year. At the very least, if he reaches his three-year averages -- 62 catches, 863 yards and seven touchdowns -- that would make him a solid No. 2 Fantasy receiver. But we're expecting him to have better numbers than that.

Consider Maclin a fine No. 2 Fantasy receiver worth a pick between Rounds 5 and 6. That makes him an excellent value on Draft Day.

Mario Manningham, SFBye: 9

Mario Manningham signed with the 49ers this offseason, and his Fantasy value is headed in the wrong direction. He is expected to start in San Francisco after signing a two-year deal, but he goes from playing with an elite quarterback in Eli Manning to a mediocre passer in Alex Smith. He also has to share targets with Michael Crabtree, Randy Moss and Vernon Davis. We don't like this move for Manningham even if it helps his bank account. Manningham has plenty of potential -- he had 60 catches for 944 yards and nine touchdowns in 2010 and has 18 touchdowns in his past three years -- but he has also battled injuries and inconsistent play. It's best to view him as a reserve Fantasy receiver who should only be drafted with a late pick.

Brandon Marshall, CHIBye: 6

It's a Denver reunion in Chicago now that Brandon Marshall will be reunited with his former quarterback in Jay Cutler this year following a trade by the Dolphins in March. Joining them will be former Denver coordinator Jeremy Bates, who is an assistant now with the Bears. Even though Chicago has been dubbed as the place where receivers go to die, Marshall should still post quality stats: The two were teammates in Denver in 2007-08 and Marshall had 206 catches for 2,590 yards and 13 touchdowns during that span. He also played well, but not great, with the Dolphins despite poor quarterback play, catching 167 passes for 2,228 yards and nine touchdowns in two seasons. If he plays 16 games with Cutler then Marshall should easily be a Top 15 Fantasy receiver or higher in all leagues. An offseason incident where he allegedly hit a woman at a New York nightclub in March is no longer a serious concern and it appears Marshall has matured into being a good teammate. Expect him to get taken with a Round 4 pick in standard leagues and possible a Round 3 choice in PPR formats.

Robert Meachem, SD

Bye: 7

Robert Meachem signed with the Chargers this offseason as their replacement for Vincent Jackson. On the surface that sounds great since Jackson was a dominant receiver in the San Diego offense, but Meachem has never had more than 722 receiving yards or 45 catches in a single season (those numbers came in 2009, and they've trickled south slowly over the past two seasons). But here's where Meachem has some substance: He's a good deep threat, and Chargers coach Norv Turner said this offseason that he likes Meachem's chances to fill in for Jackson as a high-yard average receiver in his offense. Meachem has also been responsible for 20 receiving touchdowns over the last three years. With the Chargers set to throw a bunch and give Meachem more playing time than he had in New Orleans, there's some potential here for him to play well. Career-highs in catches and yardage are definitely not out of the question. We'd roll the dice on Meachem as with a middle- to late-round pick in drafts as a quality reserve receiver with the potential to break out in Turner's offense.

Denarius Moore, OAK

Bye: 5

Denarius Moore enters this season as perhaps the best Fantasy receiver for the Raiders and a potential starter -- once he's healthy. Moore played well as a rookie in 2011 with 33 catches for 618 yards and five touchdowns and five carries for 61 yards and a touchdown. He only played in 13 games with 10 starts, but he flashed his big-play potential by averaging 18.7-yards per catch and 12.2-yards per carry. Moore battled a hamstring injury during the preseason that could limit him for at least the start of the season. But if he can heal quickly he'll have a chance to total 1,000 yards and maybe even double digits in touchdowns. He should be considered a quality reserve worth a pick starting in Round 9.

Bye: 6

You might not think much of Lance Moore, but the sneaky Saints receiver has been fairly consistent over his last three full years. Throw out a 2009 season when he missed nine games, and he's had at least eight touchdowns per year with a receiving average of 11.7 yards per catch. Where Moore has disappointed is in his reception totals -- he's gone from 79 in 2008 to 66 in 2010 to 52 in 2011. We suspect there is a rebound in store for Moore in 2012 as he's healthy heading into the season and Robert Meachem is no longer a part of the Saints' offense. No one will draft Moore to be a starter, not even in PPR formats, but with his role in New Orleans to stay the same and coverage dedicated away from him, he has the chance to be a nice reserve option. We have no qualms about taking Moore with a late-round pick.

Randy Moss, SF

Bye: 9

Randy Moss will attempt a comeback with the 49ers this year after sitting out the entire 2011 season. The last time we saw Moss was in 2010 when he struggled to finish the season with the Titans. That was his third team that season after he was traded from New England to Minnesota and then cut by the Vikings. Moss, 35, reportedly still has great speed, and the 49ers plan to use him as part of their three-receiver packages with Mario Manningham and Michael Crabtree. Moss has a lot to prove, and he doesn't exactly have the best quarterback in Alex Smith. Still, Moss has a ton of potential when motivated, and he appears humbled after not finding a job last year. Plan on drafting Moss with a late-round pick in all leagues. Don't reach for him too early because the game won't match the name anymore, but he is worth putting on your roster with the chance he could revive some, not all, of that old magic.

Santana Moss, WAS

Bye: 10

Santana Moss enters this season expected to be a quality part of what should be the best passing offense he's ever had with the Redskins. Washington added Pierre Garcon and Josh Morgan in the offseason to go with tight end Fred Davis. He also has a new quarterback in rookie Robert Griffin III. The best news for Moss is he's played with such bad quarterback play recently (Rex Grossman, John Beck and Jason Campbell, to name a few) that he should do well with Griffin. His biggest hurdles: Getting targets regularly in a crowded receiving corps and escaping the injury bug that bit him last year. No one will aim for Moss to be on their Fantasy team, which should cause him to slide past Round 10 in drafts. Don't be shocked to find him available then and thereafter, which means he'd be a good reserve receiver for your team.

David Nelson, BUF

Bye: 8

David Nelson is entering his third-year in the NFL, and he could be poised for a breakout campaign. Nelson has been heading in the right direction his first two years with 31 catches for 353 yards and three touchdowns as a rookie in 2010 and 61 catches for 658 yards and five touchdowns in 2011. We could see another gradual increase this season if he can retain extensive playing time opposite Steve Johnson. Ryan Fitzpatrick looked for Nelson with 98 targets last year, so there could be a bump there too. Nelson is not worth drafting as anything more than a key reserve with a late-round pick, but he's someone to keep an eye on this year. We could see Nelson taking the next step in his career as a third-year breakout receiver.

Jordy Nelson, GB

Bye: 10

Fantasy owners were thrilled with the production they got out of Jordy Nelson last season. Now we're all wondering if he can do it again. Despite not playing as often as other star-quality receivers in the NFL and being one of two receivers to top 150 Fantasy points and not have 100 targets, Nelson had a monster season playing opposite Greg Jennings and blowing past single coverage quite a bit. He caught 70 percent of his targets for the second year in a row, 22 percent of his catches went for touchdowns and an astounding 69 percent of his catches went for first downs or touchdowns. He was clutch for Aaron Rodgers, so we get the feeling that until Nelson does something to shake Rodgers' confidence, he's going to stay involved. Defenses will also key in on Nelson a bit more going forward, but after he rocked the Lions for 162 yards and three touchdowns in Week 17 without Rodgers or Jennings on the field, we're not quite sure it will matter unless it's consistent. With the hope that Nelson picks up even more playing time in 2012 (he was in on 699 of the Packers' 988 offensive plays last year), we like Nelson as a low-end No. 1 Fantasy receiver. He's got a shot to have some good value as a pick in Round 3 in the majority of leagues.

Hakeem Nicks, NYG

Bye: 11

Hakeem Nicks broke a bone in his foot in late May that required surgery and sidelined him for 12 weeks. He's expected to rejoin the Giants in mid-August, or roughly when their training camp begins to wind down. Nicks proved he was one of the best receivers in the NFL last year when he topped 75 catches and 1,000 yards for the second year in a row with 18 touchdowns in 28 games over two seasons. He also was instrumental in helping the Giants win the Super Bowl with more than 100 receiving yards in three of four playoff games. While Nicks might still be available for Week 1, the injury is a big reminder that he's not a lock to stay healthy for 16 games, something he hasn't done in three seasons. He's dealt with hamstring, knee and foot injuries throughout his career. Figure that he'll slip in Fantasy drafts because of this, but he should still be useful. Maybe you can steal him in Round 4 this summer, but count on him still being taken with a third-round pick as a low-end No. 1 Fantasy receiver.

Brian Quick, STL

Bye: 9

The Rams spent the first pick of the second round of the 2012 NFL Draft on Appalachian State wide receiver Brian Quick. Measuring at 6-foot-4 and 220 pounds, Quick is the school's all-time leader in receptions (202), receiving yards (3,418) and touchdown catches (31). Last season was his best with 71 catches, 1,096 yards and 11 scores. He is probably faster than quick but is a tremendous target short or deep. He has excellent downfield speed after he gets into second gear or higher and ran a decent 40-yard dash at the combine (best of 4.50 seconds). Quick also plays even larger than his height thanks to 34-inch arms and an 80-inch wingspan. He could get fast-tracked to the Rams' starting lineup in training camp because they don't have any quality receivers already on the roster. Quick is worth a late look in deeper Fantasy seasonal leagues, a middle- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a second- or third-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Rueben Randle, NYG

Bye: 11

The Giants grabbed LSU's Rueben Randle with the final pick of the second round of the NFL draft, and they might need him sooner than they expected. Randle had 53 catches this past season for 917 yards and eight touchdowns.

The Giants expected him to adjust quickly to the pro game thanks to his size (6-foot-3 and 210 pounds) and athleticism but as of mid-August he hadn't advanced up the depth chart, even with Hakeem Nicks sidelined with a foot injury. Nicks has returned to the team and the opportunities Randle should have going forward won't be as expansive as we first thought. We'd be surprised if he didn't make at least a small impact for the Giants in 2012, but that doesn't mean he's worth drafting for seasonal leagues. He's best left as a middle- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a second-round pick in rookie-only drafts.

Sidney Rice, SEA

Bye: 11

Sidney Rice struggled in his first year with the Seahawks and will attempt to make amends in 2012. Shoulder and concussion problems limited him to nine games, finishing with 32 catches for 484 yards and two touchdowns. He had shoulder surgery this offseason and also a minor knee procedure, but he is expected to be ready for the start of the season even after being limited in training camp. Rice might never duplicate his 2009 breakout campaign when he had 83 catches for 1,312 yards and eight touchdowns, but he could definitely come close if he plays a full season. The good news is that the risk in taking him with a pick after Round 10 isn't too high, and the reward should be nice if he can stay on the field.

Laurent Robinson, JAC

Bye: 6

Laurent Robinson capitalized on his career year in 2011 with a big payday this offseason in Jacksonville. Robinson signed a five-year, $32.3 million deal with the Jaguars after exploding in Dallas. He had career highs in receptions (54), receiving yards (858) and touchdowns (11) in 2011, but that was playing with Tony Romo and taking advantage of injuries to Miles Austin. In Jacksonville, Robinson will have to get cooking with a young quarterback in Blaine Gabbert and a young receiver in Justin Blackmon, not to mention a more conservative offense. As such, his stats should suffer. Prior to his one-year stint in Dallas, Robinson combined for 89 catches for 1,000 yards and four touchdowns in four injury-plagued years with Atlanta and St. Louis. Don't be the one to reach for Robinson as a starting option, but if you can snap him up as a quality reserve with the hope he can live up to his contract, do so with a pick starting until Round 11.

Eddie Royal, SD

Bye: 7

Eddie Royal signed with the Chargers this offseason after spending the first four years of his career with the Broncos. Royal will look to help revamp a passing attack that lost Vincent Jackson while also contributing on special teams. Royal does have two seasons with at least 50-plus catches, including 91 receptions for 980 yards and five touchdowns as a rookie in 2008. He could end up landing a slot role for the Chargers and is probably worth a late-round gamble in PPR drafts.

Emmanuel Sanders, PITBye: 4

Emmanuel Sanders' stats declined last year, but he should reverse that trend in 2012. Sanders caught 22 passes for 288 yards and two touchdowns last year, equal or worse totals than his rookie season. But Sanders is expected to have much more playing time in 2012 as the Steelers' third receiver now that Hines Ward has retired (if he can beat out Jericho Cotchery). That should result in a bump in targets for Sanders (92 career targets) even though he'll split them with primary wideouts Mike Wallace and Antonio Brown. Sanders is worth considering with a late pick as a low-end reserve.

Jerome Simpson, MINBye: 11

Jerome Simpson will play at most 13 games for the Vikings in 2012 after being suspended for three games because of an offseason arrest and guilty plea to a drug charge. But once he returns in Week 4 at the Lions, he should be a key figure in the Minnesota passing game. He'll be an upgrade over Michael Jenkins after posting career-highs in 2011 with 50 catches for 725 yards and four touchdowns. He's got some potential to serve as a quality reserve for Fantasy owners -- not a consistent No. 3 receiver -- making him worth a late pick in drafts. Just remember, he'll miss the first three games of the year, so if you draft him you have to commit to keeping him for a little while. If you're not ready to do that, then look elsewhere for Fantasy help and pick him up off waivers before Week 4.

Steve Smith, CARBye: 6

What a difference a year makes: A year ago, we feared drafting Steve Smith given his rookie quarterback and his presence on a team not expected to make many waves. Now owners have to be careful not to take him too high. Smith meshed perfectly with Cam Newton and finished as the sixth-best Fantasy receiver in standard formats thanks to his 79-catch, 1,394-yard, seven-touchdown campaign. He had either 100 yards receiving or a touchdown in all but six games last season and should continue to burn defenders with his deep speed as opponents get a grip on containing Newton first and Smith second. And while Smith is 34 years old, he is still expected to put up nice numbers. With at least seven touchdowns and/or over 1,000 yards in six of his last eight full seasons (throw out 2004), Smith has the track record, quarterback and skills to remain a quality Fantasy option. Most Fantasy owners won't draft him to be a No. 1 receiver because of the risk involved taking an older player, but that just makes him a fantastic No. 2 Fantasy option who is a borderline steal in Round 4 in drafts.

Steve Smith, STLBye: 9

Steve Smith is trying to make a comeback with the Rams this season after struggling through nine games with the Eagles in 2011. Smith, a former All-Pro with the Giants in 2009, is trying to return from knee problems the past two years. He has a combined 59 catches for 653 yards and four touchdowns the past two seasons, but in 2010 he had 107 catches for 1,220 yards and seven touchdowns. He will likely never reach those totals again, especially this year, but he could be a useful option with the Rams, who need help at receiver. He is worth a late-round flier in deep PPR leagues.

Torrey Smith, BALBye: 8

After nearly leading the Ravens in receiving yards as a rookie - and leading them in receiving touchdowns - the sky is the limit for Torrey Smith in 2012. Smith was among the league's most inconsistent Fantasy receivers last season, something he told CBSSports.com he wants to improve on. Of his seven scores, three came in one game and he scored in consecutive games once. His yardage was also wobbly as there was only one occasion where he had back-to-back games with at least 50 yards. Smith admitted to being raw as a rookie and has worked this offseason to improve his technique in hopes to "dominate" in 2012. That sounds great to us. We think Smith is the best Ravens receiver to draft in Fantasy and would do so with a pick starting in Round 6 as a borderline No. 2/No. 3 option with upside.

Golden Tate, SEABye: 11

Golden Tate is entering his third season in the NFL, and he could be poised for a breakout campaign. Tate has increased his catches, yards and touchdowns in each of his first two years, so many people believe this could be the season he puts it all together. The problem for Tate is Seattle has plenty of mid-level receiving talent, so he has work to do to land playing time. Missing valuable offseason workouts with a fractured hand didn't help him. He's a speculative late-round flier at best for now.

Demaryius Thomas, DENBye: 7

Demaryius Thomas was not shy about saying he was happy to see Peyton Manning replace the departed Tim Tebow, and it's hard to blame him. While Tebow helped Thomas post quality stats in 2011, Manning could make Thomas a stud because he's a much better quarterback. Thomas missed the first six games of 2011 with an Achilles' injury, but he finished with 32 catches for 551 yards and four touchdowns, including three games in December with double digits in Fantasy points. He also caught a game-winning 80-yard touchdown dart from Tebow to upend the Steelers in the playoffs. Thomas has a ton of upside, and Manning should be able to make him shine. He is a big target at 6-foot-3, 235 pounds and runs well, and this is his third year in the NFL, which is typically when receivers have a breakout campaign. Thomas is headed in that direction as long as Manning is close to 100 percent (Thomas also has an injury history of his own to overcome). The risk outweighs the reward - draft Thomas as a No. 2 Fantasy receiver as early as Round 4 thanks to his breakout potential in 2012.

Mike Wallace, PIT

Mike Wallace is on track to have another contract year after having one last season. Expected to play on his restricted tender in 2012, Wallace enters as the Steelers' bona fide No. 1 receiver even if he barely led the team in receptions last year. But the career-high 72 catches didn't go as far as Fantasy owners hoped, thanks in big part to sagging stats in his final seven games (25 catches for 325 yards and two touchdowns, both vs. Cincy). Wallace's speed and ability to catch the deep ball keep him among the top receivers in Fantasy, but his desire to get a contract like the highest-paid receivers in the league forced Wallace to miss training camp and a chunk of the preseason. The standoff between the two sides could potentially stunt Wallace's understanding of the Pittsburgh offense since it's being changed thanks to Todd Haley. Wallace obviously has No. 1 potential in Fantasy but he might end up getting picked as if he were a No. 2 Fantasy receiver. Consider Wallace no earlier than Round 4 on Draft Day.

Nate Washington is coming off a season loaded with career-highs across the board, but it's unlikely that he'll be as effective in 2012. Washington, who had minor offseason knee surgery, benefited from Kenny Britt's season-ending knee injury in Week 3, totaling 74 catches on 121 targets for 1,023 yards and seven touchdowns (with four of the scores coming from Jake Locker and three from incumbent starter Matt Hasselbeck). In his previous two seasons in Tennessee, Washington averaged 44.5 catches for 628.0 yards and six scores. With Britt expected back eventually and rookie Kendall Wright added to the mix, he should end up somewhere in-between. Get used to the idea of drafting Washington as a quality reserve receiver with a pick starting in Round 8 or 9.

Reggie Wayne, IND

Peyton Manning, Pierre Garcon and Dallas Clark are gone from Indianapolis, but Reggie Wayne chose to stay. Wayne signed a three-year deal this offseason to stick with the Colts, and he'll remain the top receiving target there. But he'll have to learn a new offense and work with a new quarterback in top draft pick Andrew Luck while on a team that will probably struggle much like it did last season. Here's the positive: When Wayne worked with capable quarterbacks in 2011 (Kerry Collins, Dan Orlovsky), he totaled 42 catches, 504 yards and three touchdowns over eight games. That's way better than the nasty 33 catches for 456 yards and one score he had with the lowly Curtis Painter. Wayne's best days might be behind him, but assuming that the worst he'll do is match last season's totals with Luck, Wayne could end up being a delightful steal in Fantasy drafts. Grab him as a borderline No. 2/No. 3 Fantasy receiver with a pick starting in Round 7 -- he might very well outperform our expectations.

And after not getting a contract extension this offseason, Welker is in a contract year again. Welker signed his franchise tender this offseason and has a one-year deal, meaning he's expected to arrive for camp on time and remain a major contributor in the Patriots offense. Even with the addition of Brandon Lloyd and the maturation of tight ends Rob Gronkowski and Aaron Hernandez, Welker has a unique role in the Patriot offense and remains a candidate for 100-plus receptions. He's a nice No. 1 receiver worth a pick in Round 3 in standard drafts and Round 2 in PPR drafts.

Roddy White's 2011 started slow but finished strong, and thanks to that big finish Fantasy owners are ready to bank on White again in 2012. White had 47 catches for 563 yards and three touchdowns in his first nine games before exploding in Week 11 and finishing with 53 catches for 733 yards and five scores in his final seven outings. Though there is concern about Julio Jones cutting into his production this year, the reality is that White has been among the most targeted receivers in the NFL over the last five seasons, including the most-targeted wideout over the last two years. His numbers should still be pretty good. Expect White to wind up going in Round 2 or 3 in all drafts.

Mike Williams has had 65 catches in each of his first two seasons, but what he did with them varied wildly. After getting 964 yards and 11 scores as a rookie, Williams was well-documented as a colossal bust last year with 771 receiving yards and three touchdowns. Poor off-field habits and a lack of preparation were reported as reasons for the decline, and he's lost his role as the Bucs' No. 1 receiver because of it. With the addition of Vincent Jackson, Williams will be relegated to being Josh Freeman's No. 2 wideout starting this year. That's not horrible since it should mean lighter coverage for him, but his targets are sure to sink (he had over 120 in each of the last two seasons). Even with him entering his third year, he should be considered a reserve option in most leagues with a middle- to late-round pick.

Kendall Wright, TEN

Baylor wide receiver Kendall Wright was the first-round pick of the Titans, where he should fit in as a slot receiver. Wright logged evidence in 50 games that he could scorch college defenses with blink-quick moves and great deep speed. Wright holds a share of 10 Baylor career receiving records and set a single-season mark last year with 108 catches for 1,663 yards, 14 touchdown receptions and nine games with more than 100 yards. His career total of 4,004 yards receiving is 1,300 yards more than anyone who preceded him. Speed is the name of his game but he doesn't have great size (5-foot-10) to be an elite NFL receiver, and that goes double if he's sharing the field with guys like Kenny Britt and Nate Washington. He might make an impact, but it might not be in 2012 (we do like his long-term prospects with a mobile gunslinger like Jake Locker). Figure Wright to be worth a late-round pick in seasonal drafts, a middle- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a Top 20 pick in rookie only formats.

Titus Young might have stumbled out of the gate with the Lions, but once he scored his first NFL touchdown things began to click for him. Scoreless through his first seven games, Young developed into a fairly reliable receiver starting in Week 8 and finished with 33 of his 48 catches, 398 of his 604 yards and all six of his touchdowns in his final nine regular-season games. That sets the stage for Young to keep it up in 2012 with the Lions. Defensive coverage will be tilted toward Calvin Johnson, and that should give Young some opportunities to exploit one-on-one matchups. We love him as a No. 3 Fantasy receiver worth a pick in Round 7 or 8.

Tight End

Dwayne Allen, IND

Bye: 4

The Colts took Clemson tight end Dwayne Allen with their third-round pick in April's draft. Allen earned the John Mackey Award as the nation's top tight end as a junior, totaling 48 catches for 577 yards and eight touchdowns. And like so many great Fantasy tight ends, he's a former basketball standout. Allen has good hands and runs good routes but doesn't have solid speed and still needs work as a blocker. We could see him as a chain-moving type for the Colts, albeit one who shouldn't put up a slew of catches every year. He's worth a late pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a third-round choice in rookie-only drafts.

Martellus Bennett, NYG

Bye: 11

Martellus Bennett has long been thought of as one of the best No. 2 tight ends in the NFL, but now he's escaping Jason Witten's shadow in Dallas to become the potential starter for the Giants. He signed a one-year deal this offseason with New York, and he should be the starter. Thanks to his size (6 foot 7), Bennett has a ton of upside, but he's often not had the right frame of mind to play effectively, something that turned coaches off in Dallas. In New York, things could be very different. He is worth drafting with a late-round flier in deep leagues, and he is definitely someone to monitor if he goes undrafted in your league.

Kevin Boss, KC

Bye: 7

Kevin Boss left Oakland this offseason after one disappointing year to sign a three-year deal in Kansas City. Boss, who had two consecutive years with at least 35 catches, 530 yards and five touchdowns with the Giants, struggled with the Raiders in 2011 with 28 catches for 368 yards and three touchdowns. With the Chiefs, Boss will compete for playing time with Tony Moeaki, but he has a lot to prove to Fantasy owners. We consider Boss a reserve Fantasy tight end at best, and he should not be drafted in most formats. If he starts out the season playing well then add him off the waiver wire, or he can be a one-week replacement during the season.

Jordan Cameron, CLE

Bye: 10

Jordan Cameron is a deep, deep sleeper in 2012. He played very sparingly as a rookie but has the size and ability to be a matchup-crushing tight end for the Browns. He's one to keep an eye on this summer - if he can land a regular role in the Cleveland offense then he'll be worth a late-round flier. Until then, he's not worth owning in standard formats.

Brent Celek, PHI

Bye: 7

Brent Celek returned as a solid Fantasy tight end in 2011 after a disappearing act in 2010, and Fantasy owners want to know if the real Celek will show himself. He was a standout option in 2009 as well, and the hope is he will remain a consistent threat this season. We believe in Celek because prior to last year, Michael Vick said he would make a concerted effort to get his tight end more involved. The result was five games with double digits in Fantasy points (standard scoring), including three in a row to close the season. As such, Celek finished as the No. 8 tight end in standard leagues. He sprained his right MCL early in training camp but is otherwise healthy for the first time in years. Consider him a good starting choice worth a pick beginning in Round 9.

Scott Chandler, BUF

Bye: 8

Scott Chandler went from an unknown to a decent Fantasy tight end in 2011, and he will look to build on his performance this year. Prior to last year, Chandler had one catch for 8 yards in his career, but he ended 2011 with 38 catches for 389 yards and six touchdowns. He didn't score after Week 8, and the Bills don't quite have a dynamic passing attack. But Chandler has the chance to be a useful bye-week replacement for Fantasy owners this season. The "poor man's Rob Gronkowski" is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues, but Chandler should be added off the waiver wire if you need a tight end during a bye, especially with the right matchup.

Dallas Clark, TB

Bye: 5

Dallas Clark signed a one-year deal with the Bucs in late May, replacing Kellen Winslow and giving quarterback Josh Freeman a decent short-area target. A recent history of injuries along with declining production (352 yards in 11 games last year) makes Clark fairly unappealing for Fantasy owners. He's fine as a low-risk, late-round pick but no one should expect Clark to put up huge numbers.

Charles Clay, MIA

Bye: 7

Charles Clay could be an interesting sleeper for the Dolphins and Fantasy owners this year under new coach Joe Philbin. The former Packers offensive coordinator likes to utilize the tight end, and Clay appears to be more of a playmaker than Anthony Fasano. Clay was limited as a rookie with just 16 catches for 233 yards and three touchdowns, but his playing time was minimal. If he finds a way to get on the field more this season than his production could increase. We're not advocating to draft Clay, but he is someone to monitor. If he starts out the season playing well then add him off the waiver wire.

Jared Cook, TEN

Bye: 11

Jared Cook ended 2011 with a bang, totaling 21 catches for 335 yards and one touchdown with two 100-yard games in his final three outings. That could set him up to be a factor in the Titans' offense in 2012. Cook fits the mold of the big, matchup-breaking tight end that dominated a number of defenses last year. After posting career-highs last season (49 catches for 759 yards and three touchdowns), Fantasy owners should consider him a sleeper this season with a real chance to top those numbers. If you're not into spending an early- or middle-round pick on a tight end, then Cook's one to check out as a sleeper starting in Round 10. Pairing him with another sleeper tight end might be a successful plan for owners.

Owen Daniels, HOU

Bye: 8

We're not sure if Owen Daniels can be trusted as a No. 1 Fantasy tight end anymore. He started 2011 red hot, posting at least eight Fantasy points (standard scoring) in four of his first five games. He did it once more the rest of the season (Week 14), and part of the reason could be Matt Schaub (foot) going down. He had below five Fantasy points in 10 games the rest of the year, including the playoffs. Daniels has plenty of potential to be a good Fantasy contributor, but it's hard to trust him on a consistent long-term basis. He's best considered as a top-end backup worth a late pick in all drafts, but don't be surprised if he rebounds with a full year with Schaub.

Fred Davis, WAS

Bye: 10

Fred Davis was long thought of as one of the best backup tight ends in the NFL, but he finally got the chance to shine in 2011 and should play well again in 2012. Davis was given the franchise tag by the Redskins this offseason and was quick to sign his tender sheet. He returns after a career season in which he established single-season highs in receptions (59) and receiving yards (796). The 796 yards were the fourth-most in a season by a tight end in Redskins history. Davis had a solid season in 2011 before his four-game suspension for failing multiple drug tests ended his year. We're glad Davis is back with the Redskins, and he should get an upgrade at quarterback with rookie Robert Griffin III. So long as he stays focused on football (and motivated by being in a contract year again), expect Davis to be drafted with a mid-to-late round pick as a No. 1 tight end on Draft Day.

Kellen Davis, CHI

Bye: 6

Kellen Davis could be a deep sleeper at tight end this summer. Last year he led the Bears in receiving touchdowns with five while playing in an offense that didn't utilize tight ends as receivers on a regular basis. But because of that style of offense, Davis hauled in just 18 passes on the year. Here's where things get interesting: The Bears have scrapped parts of last year's offense and intend to use the tight end more, and in turn they re-signed the 6-foot-7 Davis during the offseason. There's a chance that Davis could become so big a part of the Bears' offense that he actually develops some use for Fantasy owners. He's worth a late-round gamble - if he plays well early on then owners will have a steal; if not, owners can just cut him without thinking twice. There's also the chance that he goes undrafted in most leagues, in which case he's a name to keep in mind off the waiver wire during the year. We're keeping an eye on him for you during the summer.

Vernon Davis, SF

Bye: 9

Fantasy owners have to hope that Vernon Davis picks up where last season ended. Davis closed the season on a tear with five touchdowns in his final five games, including the playoffs, and three games with at least 112 yards. He had 10 catches for 292 yards and four touchdowns in two postseason games against New Orleans and the Giants, and his playoff outing completely overshadowed his regular season when he had just seven games with double digits in Fantasy points. Davis remains a No. 1 Fantasy tight end in all leagues even with the 49ers adding receivers this offseason in Mario Manningham and Randy Moss. Davis will lose some targets with those additions, but he will also gain more single coverage, which will help his performance. Plan on drafting Davis around Round 5 or 6 in the majority of leagues.

Ed Dickson, BAL

Bye: 8

Ed Dickson has the size to be a playmaking tight end, but opportunities and inconsistent play have hurt him in the past and might limit him in the future, especially entering the season with a potential shoulder injury during preseason action. Dickson's second season produced some good numbers - 54 grabs for 528 yards and five scores, but outside of a career game against Seattle he really wasn't great for Fantasy owners while sharing time and targets with Dennis Pitta. Expect Dickson to get taken late in some drafts, but don't count on him to be anything more than a one-week replacement option for owners in 2012. Just monitor his shoulder injury heading into Week 1 to make sure he's 100 percent healthy.

Joel Dreessen, DEN

Joel Dreessen scored six touchdowns last year and 10 over his last two seasons in Houston, but he'll have the chance to catch even more in Denver this season. The Broncos signed Dreessen soon after signing Peyton Manning but before signing Jacob Tamme, so now the hunch is that Dreessen will have a similar role to what he had last year as a second tight end and red-zone threat. We might consider him off waivers during the year as a one-week replacement, but because he's not consistent nor expected to overtake Tamme in production, he's not worth a draft pick unless in the absolute deepest of PPR Fantasy leagues.

Michael Egnew, MIA

The Dolphins took Missouri tight end Michael Egnew in the third round of the NFL draft. Egnew had 90 receptions for 762 yards and five scores as a junior in 2010, then made 47 catches as a senior. He gives the Dolphins depth behind veteran Anthony Fasano. He might even have an outside chance to oust Fasano for the starting job. The Dolphins are desperate for receivers and Egnew could fit in as a No. 2 type tight end who can stretch defenses down the middle of the field. He's worth a pick only late in dynasty/keeper leagues and in rookie-only drafts for now.

Anthony Fasano, MIA

Anthony Fasano continues to be just a meandering Fantasy tight end and a potential bye-week replacement, though his production could increase this year under new coach Joe Philbin. He has a history of using the tight end as the former offensive coordinator in Green Bay (Jermichael Finley ring a bell?). Fasano will remain the starter for the Dolphins even though Charles Clay has more upside, but Fasano has still averaged 35 catches for 440 yards and four touchdowns the past three years. Catching darts from a rookie quarterback won't help his case. He is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues, but he could help you as a one-week replacement when he has a good matchup if your starter is on a bye or hurt.

Jermichael Finley, GB

Fantasy owners have learned to accept Jermichael Finley as a high quality tight end, though his production doesn't always suggest as such. Finley technically finished as a Top 5 option, but his numbers came sparingly. Finley had an 85-yard, three-touchdown game at Chicago in Week 3 last year and a 64-yard, one touchdown game vs. Detroit in Week 17 (when a lot of people aren't playing Fantasy). Take those two games away and Finley averaged 44 receiving yards per game and one touchdown every 11.25 receptions. He's got room to improve not only his consistency but also his numbers, and the Packers should remain a pass-happy team. Finley's worth taking as a weekly must-start tight end starting in Round 6.

Bye: 7Coby Fleener, IND

Stanford tight end Coby Fleener will join college teammate Andrew Luck in Indianapolis after the Colts took him in the second round of the draft. In 2011, Fleener averaged 19.6 yards per reception with 10 touchdown receptions, which followed up an eight-touchdown campaign in 2010. This is the perfect spot for Fleener and has the makings of Peyton Manning to Dallas Clark for years and years. The two obviously have chemistry going back to their Stanford days and should be able to connect regularly as soon as Week 1 this season. Fleener isn't a thumper as a blocker, but he does have surprising foot speed, agility and leaping ability for a player of his size, making him a legitimate threat down the seam. We see him as someone well worth the risk of taking with a late-round pick in seasonal drafts, a middle- to late-round pick in dynasty/keeper leagues and a second-round pick in rookie-only formats.

Bye: 4Antonio Gates, SD

The last time the Chargers were without Vincent Jackson for an extended period of time was 2010. He missed the first 10 games of the year, and with Philip Rivers leaning on Antonio Gates the tight end posted a whopping 50 catches for 782 yards and 10 touchdowns over that span. But then Gates went down with a foot injury that he couldn't get quite fixed. He was limited to 13 games last year but still finished with 64 catches for 778 yards and seven touchdowns. In mid-May, Norv Turner declared Gates healthy, and he participated in his first offseason practice session in two years. When healthy, he's an elite talent, but foot problems might plague him the rest of his career. Still, you have to draft Gates with the hope he plays a full season, just make sure you're covered with a quality backup option. We still value Gates as a Top 5 Fantasy tight end worth taking toward the end of Round 4/beginning of Round 5, which frankly is a good bargain compared to the likes of Gronkowski and Graham. We hope Jackson's departure leads to another big year for Gates.

Bye: 7Tony Gonzalez, ATL

Tony Gonzalez didn't get lost in the shuffle in Atlanta with Roddy White and Julio Jones beginning to form one of the most dangerous receiver tandems in football. In fact, his stats improved across the board from 2010 as he scored seven times and caught 80 balls for 875 yards. Fine, Gonzalez isn't Rob Gronkowski or Jimmy Graham, but he still finished fourth in Fantasy points among all tight ends in standard formats and had at least 80 receiving yards or 20 yards and a touchdown in seven of 16 games. He's a pretty good bargain in Fantasy: He'll give you good stats at the tight end position and can be had with a middle- to late-round pick in drafts after the likes of Jason Witten and Vernon Davis.

Jimmy Graham, NO

Bye: 6

Chances are you already know what you're getting in Saints tight end Jimmy Graham: A freakish talent with huge size, very good speed and excellent hands with the eyes of an All-Pro quarterback on him at all times. The 149 targets Graham had last season were not only the most for any tight end but sixth-best across the whole league. And in 18 games, he had just five contests without 100 yards or a touchdown. The guy is a beast, and no slow down is expected. With Rob Gronkowski or Graham considered the top tight end in Fantasy, both will be joined at the hip on Draft Day (figure Graham to get taken within 10 picks of Gronkowski). That makes Graham a good value as a second or third-round pick in standard leagues, a second-round pick in PPR leagues and a potential first-round pick in leagues that allow tight ends to be counted as wide receivers.

Jermaine Gresham, CIN

Bye: 8

Everyone who plays Fantasy Football (and everyone in the NFL) is looking for the next Rob Gronkowski or Jimmy Graham. Jermaine Gresham might be it. The big tight end caught over 50 passes for the second season in a row for the Bengals in 2011, adding a career-best 596 yards and six touchdowns. What's more, there's room for improvement as he's never had more than 85 yards in a game and has scored in back-to-back games just once in two seasons. However, he's had at least four catches in 17 of his 30 career games (including the playoffs), with 10 such games happening last year. Offensive coordinator Jay Gruden has spoken highly about Gresham and wants to involve him more. With second-year quarterback Andy Dalton improving as a passer, we can only think that Gresham has nowhere to go but up. Draft him as a low-end No. 1 Fantasy tight end worth a pick starting in Round 9.

Rob Gronkowski, NE

Bye: 9

There are only a handful of players whose intense hype matches his Fantasy value, and tight end Rob Gronkowski is one of them. Check out these stats: He has 31 touchdowns in 36 career games, averaged nearly 83 yards per game last regular season and failed to produce at least 10 Fantasy points (standard scoring) in five of his 16 regular-season games last year. If Gronkowski were a wide receiver he'd be second-best to Calvin Johnson in Fantasy. Clearly, he's great, he's over his ankle injury from February, and no regression is expected as defenses should continue to struggle with him. So when should you draft him? Despite his incredible production and expectations, most Fantasy leagues only start one tight end, so dedicating a very early-round pick to Gronkowski would close the door on picking up a tight end later at a better value, not to mention cost you a quality player at another position in the early rounds. But even with that in mind, his work cannot be ignored, and there are simply too many Fantasy points at stake with him. If you're prepared to commit to a tight end early on, Gronkowski is well worth a second-round pick regardless of format. The only kind of leagues where we'd take him in Round 1 is in formats that do not require starting a tight end, meaning that Gronkowski can be valued as a receiver instead. Just remember this: The smaller the league, the more quality tight ends will be available.

Aaron Hernandez, NE

Bye: 9

Aaron Hernandez might be listed as a tight end, but he typically lines up like a wide receiver and is one of two New England behemoths expected to help propel Tom Brady's stats. Hernandez had a tremendous sophomore year in 2011 with 79 catches for 910 yards and seven touchdowns, but he was overshadowed by Rob Gronkowski's career year (90 catches for 1,327 yards and 17 touchdowns). Still, Hernandez has unlimited potential and should be considered a prime No. 1 Fantasy option in all leagues worth drafting as early as the middle Round 4 as the third tight end drafted, and that actually makes him a nice bargain compared to Gronkowski (who will be taken in Round 2) and the Saints' Jimmy Graham (who will be taken in Round 3).

Rob Housler has plenty of potential coming into his second year in the NFL. He had a quiet rookie season with just 12 catches for 133 yards, but there is a lot of upside here based on his talent. He will likely share playing time and targets with Todd Heap, so keep an eye on how Housler is used during training camp and early in the season. Bye: 9

If two years of evidence is anything to go by then we should have Dustin Keller pegged. He will get off to a hot start -- he's got five touchdowns in September the past two years -- before pulling a disappearing act. He'll have a two-touchdown game against Buffalo, something he's done twice the last two seasons. And he should finish the year with five touchdowns. Keller has the potential to be a star, and he's entering a contract year this season so he could be motivated to play well. But his production tends to be mediocre, especially after September. The good news for Keller is the Jets need help in their passing game with no credible weapons beyond Santonio Holmes, so he might see more targets by default. Still, you should only view Keller as a good No. 2 Fantasy tight end at best with a late-round pick. Perhaps he's a good tight end to start the season with before replacing him when (if) he turns cold.

Lance Kendricks was a star last preseason, but he forgot to keep playing at a high level once the real games started. Kendricks had just 28 catches for 352 yards and no scores as a rookie in 2011, struggling between drops, injury woes and inconsistent quarterback play in St. Louis. He does have plenty of potential and now coach Jeff Fisher envisions him playing a prominent role. We're excited for Kendricks this year but he has a lot to prove. Don't plan on drafting him in the majority of leagues, but he could be a great bye-week or injury replacement. If he gets off to a hot start then he is definitely worth adding off the waiver wire.

Fantasy owners should hope that Marcedes Lewis is over his big-money hangover after going from 10 touchdowns in 2010 to zilch in 2011. Lewis was a colossal disappointment but figures to rebound in new head coach Mike Mularkey's offense, which has featured the tight end prominently. Lewis is worth a late-round gamble in deeper Fantasy formats but probably will best serve owners as a potential waiver-wire player during the season. If he can start to find the end zone again, he'll regain some relevance in Fantasy.

Heath Miller, PIT

Bye: 4

In a league full of playmaking tight ends, Heath Miller stands out as a declining option for Fantasy purposes. Miller scored twice last year on 51 catches for 631 yards (12.4 yard average). He did plenty of work as a blocker, which kept him on the field, but his receiving totals aren't where they were from his breakout 2009 season. Miller's stuck at the bottom of a very deep position in Fantasy and shouldn't be taken as anything more than a late-round flier, if at all. If there's a silver lining, it's that he should be available as a one-week replacement off waivers during the season, a role he's fit for.

Zach Miller, SEA

Bye: 11

Zach Miller was a tremendous disappointment with the Seahawks in 2011 after he signed a huge contract prior to the season. Miller had just 25 catches for 233 yards and no touchdowns, which were all career lows, and now he has to share playing time with Kellen Winslow. He suffered going to a new team after four years in Oakland, but he could rebound this year. Miller is not worth drafting in the majority of leagues, but he is someone to keep your eye on. If he starts out the season playing well then he would be worth adding off the waiver wire as a bye-week or injury replacement.

Tony Moeaki, KC

Bye: 7

Tony Moeaki is expected to make a full recovery this season after sitting out the 2011 campaign with a torn ACL. Moeaki has plenty of sleeper potential, but the Chiefs had to cover themselves this offseason by signing Kevin Boss, which will limit Moeaki's ceiling. He should be considered a No. 2 Fantasy tight end at best, and he should not be drafted in the majority of leagues. If he gets off to a good start this season then add him off the waiver wire.

Greg Olsen, CAR

Bye: 6

Despite producing five touchdowns and 540 yards in his first year with Cam Newton and the Panthers, tight end Greg Olsen still left a lot to be desired. When Olsen landed in Carolina, expectations were so high that Fantasy owners believed he'd top nearly all of his career-best numbers, but he didn't come close. Injuries might have played a part, as did the presence of Jeremy Shockey, but his ugly finish (two scores in his last 11 games) will scare off Fantasy owners to a degree. We're expecting Olsen to rebound this year, especially with Shockey out of the picture. He should be drafted with a late-round pick as either a low-end starter or a quality reserve with the potential to do what we thought he'd do last season.

Brandon Pettigrew, DET

Bye: 5

Brandon Pettigrew looks like he should be a dominant Fantasy tight end. He's 6-foot-5, built like a house and plays a ton in the Lions offense. That should lead to quality production, especially in PPR leagues. He had a career-best 83 catches in 2011. Now, Pettigrew had just 777 yards on those 83 grabs, good for just a 9.4 receiving average, with five touchdowns. He's simply not the gamebreaker that Jimmy Graham or Rob Gronkowski is, nor is he a guy that the Lions have to lean on. But he should still play at a high level. We consider him a good starter, not a great one, in standard formats, worth a mid-round pick. In PPR leagues he's a solid choice as a potential Top 10 Fantasy tight end.

Dennis Pitta, BAL

Bye: 8

It wasn't until late in 2011 that Dennis Pitta started to get more work in the Ravens offense. In his first 12 games last season he had 28 catches for 289 yards and one touchdown. In his final six (including two postseason games), Pitta had 19 catches for 186 yards and three touchdowns, and that includes a game where he didn't even make a catch. Pitta has all sorts of upside, but he would need to land regular playing time to become reliable for our needs. That would mean he'd have to unseat Ed Dickson as the primary tight end for the Ravens. Until that happens, Pitta isn't worth a roster spot outside the deepest of Fantasy leagues.

Kyle Rudolph, MIN

Bye: 11

Kyle Rudolph figures to be a trendy late-round sleeper in Fantasy drafts this season. That's because he finished his rookie campaign with three touchdowns in his final seven games. But the guy never had more than three catches or more than 44 yards in any of his 16 games. The Vikings added John Carlson to their roster, and he could potentially hurt Rudolph's production. But the 6-foot-6 Rudolph reminds a lot of folks of Rob Gronkowski, and he might be used as such in 2012. He's worth a late-round pick in all drafts; if he does well, he's a steal. If he struggles, just cut him.

Tony Scheffler, DET

Bye: 5

Tony Scheffler scored six touchdowns last season for the Lions but didn't do a heck of a lot else. As the No. 2 tight end for Detroit, Scheffler was more of an annoying Fantasy option not only because of his inconsistent production but also because he was taking stats away from the likes of Brandon Pettigrew, Nate Burleson and even Calvin Johnson. Unless your league is tight end-intensive, pass on Scheffler.

Jacob Tamme, DEN

Bye: 7

If you decide to pass on spending a big pick for an elite tight end, you might want to consider Jacob Tamme later on. In fact, you might not regret making such a move. Tamme follows former Colts teammate Peyton Manning to Denver, and it's there where he's expected to take on a lot of playing time and be a factor in the offense. Tamme had just 177 yards on 19 catches in 2011 with one score, but he worked behind starter Dallas Clark in a Manning-less offense. In 10 games without Clark and with Manning in 2010, Tamme caught 67 passes for 631 yards and four touchdowns. That's the kind of total he can exceed in Denver. He's got really good athleticism and has been an effective receiver dating back to his high school days. Expect him to have some Dallas Clark-like potential and thus get swiped with a middle- to late-round pick in drafts this summer as a borderline No. 1/No. 2 tight end.

Benjamin Watson, CLE

Bye: 10

Concussions short-circuited Benjamin Watson's 2011 season, and it's tough to consider him even a decent reserve option. He started last year hot with two touchdowns in his first four games, but he was useless otherwise, failing to get even 65 yards in a game after that. Watson might be decent as a one-week replacement off waivers if he hangs on to his role with the Browns, but otherwise Fantasy owners shouldn't bother dealing with him.

Jason Witten, DAL

Bye: 5

Jason Witten continues to be one of the better Fantasy options at his position. In 2011, Witten had his fifth year in a row with at least 75 catches, and he's reached at least 90 grabs in three of those past five seasons. He also had his sixth year with at least 940 receiving yards, including his fifth in a row. He only had five touchdowns, which continues to be a problem for him (he has five touchdowns or fewer in five of nine years), but he is still considered a solid, safe Fantasy tight end, especially PPR leagues. A slightly lacerated spleen suffered in the Cowboys' first preseason game is cause for pause but Witten should have a chance to play in Week 1 and thus the majority of the year. We consider Witten a Top 8 Fantasy tight end worth drafting as early as Round 6 after the likes of Aaron Hernandez and Antonio Gates come off the board. He might go earlier in PPR leagues.

Kicker

David Akers, SF

Bye: 9

David Akers was among the best free agent signings in the NFL in 2011 with the 49ers. Heck, he was the No. 1 kicker in all leagues and an MVP to many Fantasy owners. Akers had 186 Fantasy points in a standard league, which was 35 points better than No. 2 kicker John Kasay. He made 44 of 52 field goals with seven kicks of at least 50 yards and 34 extra points. Akers should again be a tremendous Fantasy option coming into 2012, and he should be the No. 1 kicker drafted. Most kickers should be taken in the final round of all drafts, but we'd have no problem with an owner reaching for Akers in Round 12 or so to lock him up since he's that good.

Dan Bailey, DAL

Bye: 5

Dan Bailey came out of nowhere in 2011 to become an elite Fantasy kicker, and he should continue to play at a high level thanks to the explosiveness of the Dallas offense. Bailey was the No. 7 kicker last year with 32 of 37 made field goals and 39 extra points. He had seven games with double digits in Fantasy points, and he should be drafted as a No. 1 option this year. Bailey has all the qualities you look for in a Fantasy kicker: good offense, indoor stadium and accuracy. Plan on drafting him with a late-round pick.

The Bucs kept kicker Connor Barth with the franchise tag this offseason, bringing him back for a fourth season with the team. Barth made an impressive 92.9 percent of his field goals last season, but just made 26 of 28 tries with 23 extra points. Playing in the Bucs offense should make him useful as at least a good one-week replacement kicker off waivers during the year when the matchup is right.

Bye: 11

Rob Bironas continues to serve as a quality Fantasy kicker worthy of a pick on Draft Day. Last season he hit 29 of 32 field goals and all 34 of his extra point attempts. The 90.6 pct. of kicks he notched was the second best of his career -- he missed just two field goals a year prior. Bironas should continue to rack up field goal opportunities, and with the way he's making kicks, there's no reason to believe he'll slack off. Treat Bironas as a good option well worth a late- or final-round pick in drafts.

Matt Bryant had another solid year in 2011, making over 90 percent of his field goals for the second year in a row. Bryant nailed 27 of 29 field goals (all but two were from 49 yards or less) and hit 45 extra points. With the Falcons offense expected to remain prolific, there's no reason to doubt Bryant as one of the top kicking options in Fantasy. Consider Bryant a reliable leg worth picking in the last round of your Fantasy draft.

Dan Carpenter, MIABye: 7

Dan Carpenter enters this season as a No. 2 Fantasy kicker, but he has the potential to be a No. 1 option since he should remain a valuable weapon for the Dolphins. Miami is not going to score a lot, but the Dolphins should kick plenty of field goals. That's been the case for Carpenter recently with 59 field goals in 75 attempts the past two seasons. He only has 41 extra points over that span, which lowers his value, but Carpenter had five games with at least three field goals in 2011. He is worth drafting with a late-round pick in all leagues if you like a kicker with upside.

Mason Crosby, GBBye: 10

Mason Crosby will be a popular Fantasy kicker after finishing as a Top 5 option in 2011, doing far better than he did in 2010. He made a career-best 85.7 percent of his field goals but still attempted 28 of them for the second year in a row. Nailing 68 of 69 extra points helped his cause though; both were easily career-highs. Crosby kicks for one of the most potent offenses in the league and should see more opportunities for three pointers than he did in 2011. He's worth a late-round pick in all drafts.

Billy Cundiff, WASBye: 10

Billy Cundiff's last field goal attempt will forever be remembered as a kick that could have helped push the Ravens to the Super Bowl. The 32-yard miss in the AFC title game gave the Patriots the win and Cundiff an offseason full of nightmares. Those nightmares, unfortunately, carried into the summer as Cundiff was cut in late August in favor of rookie Justin Tucker. Cundiff made just 75.7 percent of his kicks last year (not including his postseason miss) and missed five of six field goals from 50-plus yards. He might land with another NFL team, but leave him off rosters until he has a starting gig again.

Phil Dawson, CLEBye: 10

The Browns and kicker Phil Dawson did not agree to terms on a new contract as the NFL deadline for franchised players passed on July 16. Dawson will play on the one year franchise tender of roughly $3.8 million and be eligible for free agency in 2013. Dawson made 24 of 29 field goals in 2011 including 7 of 8 from 50-plus yards. Dawson has connected on at least 82 percent of his field goals in each of his last five seasons and 10 of his 13 years in Cleveland. If the Browns ever had a quality offense they'd give Dawson plenty of opportunities to notch field goals and be a worthwhile Fantasy option. Until then, he's only good as a one-week waiver-wire replacement option.

Jay Feely has proven to be a reliable kicker and Fantasy option throughout his career, but he has struggled in two seasons in Arizona. Feely made 19 of 24 field goals in 2011 and 33 extra points, but he had just one 50-yard field goal. His averaging just 21.5 field goals in two years with the Cardinals, and that's not going to cut it for Fantasy owners. Nick Folk will battle Josh Brown for the kicking job in New York this season. Folk made just 19 field goals in 2011 with a long of 51 along with 44 extra points, but the Jets offense this year promises to be more conservative. Folk wasn't worth drafting in the first place given that he's not a reliable leg, but now that he'll have to earn his job all bets are off. If he wins the gig, he'll be worth a look off waivers during the season.

After an injury-plagued season in 2010, Stephen Gostkowski returned in 2011 to have another outstanding year. Gostkowski made 29 of 33 field goals with a long of 50 and 59 extra points. He should be considered a No. 1 Fantasy kicker this year. Gostkowski has made at least 29 field goals three times in his six-year career, and he has at least 59 extra points twice. Bears kicker Robbie Gould continued to be a reliable Fantasy kicker in 2011, nailing 28 of 32 field goals and hitting all 37 of his extra point attempts. Gould even nailed a career-best six of six field goals from 50-plus yards. He just barely finished among the Top 12 kickers in 2011 and should be considered a decent kicking option given the offense he plays with and his incredible consistency (he has fluctuated between 83.3 percent and 89.7 percent accuracy on field goals over his last six seasons). Gould is a safe, useful late-round pick this summer.

Shayne Graham signed with the Texans in May to compete with Randy Bullock for the kicking job in training camp. He was trailing in the competition, but eventually was handed the job in late August after Bullock suffered a season-ending injury. The Texans kickers have finished in the Top 10 in Fantasy points in each of the last two seasons. Consider Graham at worst a low-end Fantasy starter on Draft Day. The Texans have a potent offense, so Graham should get plenty of scoring chances.

That'll happen when you make 24 of 29 field goals (including 5 of 7 from 50-plus yards) and 54 extra points. Kicking for the Lions and being a part of their dominant offense is what makes Hanson valuable. Opportunities will continue to exist for him, making him good enough to draft with a final-round pick.

Garrett Hartley missed all of 2011 with a hip injury, but reclaimed the starting position after beating John Kasay in the preseason. Hartley has made 42 of 49 field goals over his career, but a combination of injuries, suspensions and opportunities has led him to only one year with more than eight games played. Fantasy owners should be ready to pounce on Hartley as the Saints' kicker position presents ample scoring opportunities.

Steven Hauschka is expected to return as the Seahawks kicker in 2012, and he did a nice job in 2011 despite a limited offense. Hauschka made 25 of 30 field goals, including two from 50-plus yards, with 34 extra points. Seattle's offense should improve this season with the addition of new quarterback Matt Flynn, so he could get more opportunities to kick. Alex Henery is going to need to have a big year to help the Eagles forget about giving up on David Akers. Philadelphia let Akers leave as a free agent last year, and he had a monster season for the 49ers. Henery was OK with 24 of 27 field goals and a long of 51 yards and 46 extra points, but he has a long way to go to catch Akers as an elite kicker. Fantasy owners should view Henery as a low-end No. 1 option. He has the chance to shine playing in a dynamic offense, but he was just the No. 16 kicker last season with 120 Fantasy points -- 66 behind Akers at No. 1. Plan on drafting Henery with a last-round pick on Draft Day and hope he closes the gap with Akers this year.

Sebastian Janikowski, OAKBye: 5

Sebastian Janikowski continues to prove he's among the best Fantasy kickers, and he should be drafted as a starter with a late-round pick in all leagues. In 2011, Janikowski had a down year due to a hamstring problem. He still connected on 31 field goals with a career long of 63 yards (with seven kicks from 50 yards or more) and all 36 extra points. This is the second year in a row Janikowski has made at least 31 field goals, and he should continue to be an excellent weapon for the Raiders and Fantasy owners. There will be some weeks where Janikowski wins your Fantasy matchup since he had double digits in Fantasy points seven times in 2011.

Nate Kaeding, SDBye: 7

Nate Kaeding will try to rebound from last year's torn ACL suffered on a tackle in Week 1. Beating out Nick Novak for the job in camp this summer, Kaeding has made at least 25 field goals twice in his past three seasons and at least 50 extra points three times in his career. Consider him a borderline No. 1 Fantasy option who should get drafted with a last-round pick.

Rian Lindell, BUFBye: 8

Rian Lindell will return to the Bills this year for a 10th season in Buffalo. He is coming back from last year's season-ending shoulder injury, and he remains just a No. 2 Fantasy kicker. Lindell has made 57 of 69 field goals over his last three seasons (40 games) but is 3 of 8 from 50-plus yards. If the Bills' offense can add a wrinkle or two before the start of the season, Fantasy owners in deep leagues might be convinced to spend a final-round pick on Lindell. But for the most part Lindell will go undrafted and be used as a bye-week replacement.

Mike Nugent, CINBye: 8

Just how valuable was Mike Nugent to the Bengals? The team franchised him in March to keep him from getting away. Just how valuable was Mike Nugent to Fantasy owners? He had nine Fantasy points (standard scoring) nine times in 16 games and finished as a Top 12 kicker. Nugent nailed 86.8 percent of his field goals (33 of 38, none from 50-plus yards), which is actually second-best. What's more, the Bengals' offense should continue to improve, giving Nugent some opportunities to kick more field goals. He has missed nine total field goals on 57 tries since arriving in Cincy. That's solid no matter how you slice it. We'd spend a late-round flier on Nugent in deeper leagues.

Matt Prater, DENBye: 7

Matt Prater was designated the Broncos' franchise player this offseason, and he has to prove now that he can be a franchise kicker for Fantasy owners (he was also rewarded with a four-year deal in July). Prater has done a nice job during his five-year tenure with the Broncos, but he has just one year with more than 25 made field goals. The addition of Peyton Manning should help Prater since the offense will be more explosive, but Prater should only be considered a No. 2 Fantasy option at best. If you want to rely on him as your starter then draft him with a late-round pick in all leagues, but mostly Prater should be considered a bye-week replacement or someone to add off the waiver wire.

Josh Scobee, JACBye: 6

Josh Scobee signed a four-year contract extension in mid-July, locking him into Jacksonville's future. Scobee hit 23 of 25 field goals (92 pct.) last year with five of six field goals from 50-plus yards. It was his best season since 2007, and in between those years he didn't make even 80 percent of his field goals. He also hasn't made more than the 23 field goals he hit in 2011 since 2006. Unless the Jaguars offense explodes, Scobee's field goal attempts will be limited. Expect Scobee to be available off waivers after your draft.

Ryan Succop, KCBye: 7

Ryan Succop should be considered a backup Fantasy kicker heading into this season. He has the potential to be a solid Fantasy option, but he has yet to top 25 field goals in a season. And with the Chiefs offense not exactly full of fireworks, Succop likely won't have an obscene amount of scoring chances. He should only be used as a bye-week replacement in most formats.

The Steelers will roll out Shaun Suisham as their kicker this season even after missing eight field goals in 2011. He hit 23 of 31 attempts (74.2 percent) and all 36 extra points he tried. Some notes: Suisham is a career 36.4 percent kicker from 50-plus yards (4 for 11) and a 73.6 percent kicker between 40 and 49 yards. Though he should see some good opportunities playing with the Steelers, his accuracy issues make him a risk. Think late-round pick, if at all, on Suisham in 2012.

Lawrence Tynes, NYGBye: 11

Lawrence Tynes remains a No. 2 Fantasy kicker in the majority of leagues. He's never made more than 27 field goals in a year, and in 2011 he had just 19 made field goals on 24 attempts. He did have 43 extra points last season, which shows the potential of this Giants offense, but Tynes has a lot to prove to Fantasy owners before they should consider starting him each week. Tynes is best suited as a bye-week replacement in the majority of leagues, but if you decide to draft him do so with a last-round pick on Draft Day.

Adam Vinatieri, INDBye: 4

Adam Vinatieri remains the Colts' kicker, though last season was nightmarish for him given the state of the team's offense without Peyton Manning. Manning is gone and rookie passer Andrew Luck arrives, but there's optimism that the offense won't be quite as bad as it was in 2011. That's good news for Vinatieri, who attempted only 27 field goals (missing four) and 24 extra points (making them all). Vinatieri has made at least 80 percent of his field goals in six of his last eight seasons, which is pretty good. We wouldn't draft Vinatieri but would recommend him as a one-week replacement once more is known about the Colts offense after the season kicks off.

Blair Walsh, MINBye: 11

With the fifth pick in the sixth round, the Vikings picked Georgia placekicker Blair Walsh. About two weeks later, Walsh landed the starting job when the Vikings dumped 37-year-old Ryan Longwell. Walsh is considered a reliable mid-range kicker but he hit just 21 of 35 field goal attempts in 2011 while setting an NCAA record with at least one field goal in 45 games in his career. The missed kicks last season leaves a little bit to be desired, and with the Vikings offense not expected to serve up a slew of opportunities, he can't be considered a reliable Fantasy option. Leave him off rosters.

Greg Zuerlein, STLBye: 9

Greg Zuerlein from Missouri Western was drafted in the sixth round and is expected to get a shot to kick for the Rams. Zuerlein set a NCAA record with 21 consecutive field goals last season, including nine from 50 yards or more. He has a big leg as evidenced by his success from 50-plus yards. Expect the Rams to give him some opportunities to hit some long field goals, which should be helpful to Fantasy owners in leagues that reward big kicks. The small-school kicker isn't quite worth a late pick in seasonal leagues but would be someone to consider off waivers as at least a one-week replacement. He's worth a late pick in rookie-only drafts.

Defensive LinemanJared Allen, MIN*Bye: 11

Defensive end Jared Allen posted another monster season in 2011, totaling 22 sacks to go with 66 total tackles, four fumble recoveries, a safety, three passes defensed and an interception. There's little doubt that Allen will be a stud IDP option again in 2011, and because his position is thin, there's no harm in taking him as a No. 1 defensive lineman with a mid-round choice.

Cliff Avril, DETBye: 5

The Lions franchised defensive end Cliff Avril, keeping him in town after a banner 2011 campaign. No long-term contract was agreed upon, so he's in a contract year again in 2012. Avril finished as a Top 5 Fantasy defensive lineman thanks to his team-best 11 sacks, 36 total tackles, six forced fumbles, four passes defended and interception-return for a touchdown. Basically, Avril played great in his contract year -- can he do it again? That might be hard to do, but he's still an exciting player who can put up some good stats as a defensive lineman. We like him as a No. 2 DL in leagues that reward tackles and a No. 1 DL in leagues that do not.

Jason Babin had a tremendous year in his first year with the Eagles in 2011, and he will look to build on that performance in 2012. Babin had a career-high 18 sacks to go with 40 total tackles and three forced fumbles. He now has 30.5 sacks in his past two years, and he should continue to play at a high level. Calais Campbell continues to improve each year, which is why the team signed him to a long-term deal in mid-May. Campbell has 21 sacks in the past three years, and he had eight sacks, one interception and 72 total tackles in 2011. Campbell, who finished last season as a Top-5 DL, should be considered a No. 1 defensive lineman in IDP leagues worth a mid-round pick.

Adrian Clayborn hopes to build off a good rookie season in 2012. After totaling 7.5 sacks and 42 tackles, Clayborn is expected to be the Bucs' primary pass rusher. While he's got lots of potential, he's really best suited as nothing more than a low-end No. 3 Fantasy defensive lineman. It might be a better idea to draft him as a quality reserve with a late pick.

Trent Cole continues to be one of the elite pass rushers in the NFL, and he's a No. 1 defensive lineman in IDP leagues. Cole has double digits in sacks in four of the past five years with 55 sacks over that span. He also is a good source of tackles with at least 40 in every year of his career. Plan on drafting Cole with a mid-round pick this year and hope for more excellent production at this level.

Marcell Dareus had a productive rookie campaign in 2011, and he will look to keep improving this year. Dareus, an interior defensive lineman, had 43 tackles

Darnell Dockett is a low-end defensive lineman in IDP leagues. He has at least five sacks in three of the past five seasons and at least 50 total tackles in five of the past six years. We like Dockett as a No. 3 defensive lineman, and he's worth a late-round pick in deep IDP formats.

The Panthers' best pass rusher is Charles Johnson. In two seasons he's totaled 20.5 sacks and 102 total tackles (40 tackles and 9.0 sacks in 2011), so he's been a quality stat contributor. We should see more big numbers from him this season. He's worth rolling the dice on as a No. 2 defensive lineman with a mid-round pick.

Haloti Ngata might be a nose tackle, but he still finds ways to be a quality Fantasy defensive lineman. Last season he totaled 64 tackles, five sacks, two forced fumbles and five passes defended. Expect him off of rank lists somewhere between the middle rounds in IDP drafts as a No. 1 option.

Julius Peppers, CHIBye: 6

Julius Peppers is expected to continue on as a No. 1 Fantasy option, which is what he's been for much of his career. Peppers' propensity for sacks and decent totals in every other category including tackles is what makes him so appealing to Fantasy owners. Tack on the lack of talent at defensive line compared to past seasons and Peppers is practically worth reaching for. He's a No. 1 defensive lineman worth a middle-round pick in drafts.

Jason Pierre-Paul, NYG

Bye: 11

Jason Pierre-Paul had a tremendous year in 2011, and he should now be considered an elite defensive lineman. He had 16.5 sacks last year to go with 86 total tackles (65 solo), and the scary thing is he is still getting better. We consider Pierre-Paul a No. 1 defensive lineman in IDP leagues, and he should again reach double digits in sacks with a healthy amount of tackles. He is worth drafting with a mid-round pick, and Pierre-Paul should be among the first defensive lineman drafted.

Justin Smith is a solid No. 2 defensive lineman in IDP leagues. In 2011, Smith had another solid year with 8.5 sacks to go with 68 total tackles (54 solo). He's never had double digits in sacks in his 10-year career, but he's had at least seven six times, including two years in a row. Plan on drafting Smith with a late-round pick in all leagues.

Will Smith, NO

Bye: 6

Will Smith let down Saints fans and Fantasy owners alike in 2011 with a 35-tackle, 6.5-sack campaign. More was expected from Smith, who was the team's most prolific pass rusher but didn't lead the team in sacks (safety Roman Harper had 7.5). His attempt to get back into form in 2012 won't start until Week 5, and with a bye coming in Week 6, he's effectively useless for five of the first 13 games a Fantasy owner will play. He's worth a late-round pick.

Justin Tuck remains a standout defensive lineman in all IDP leagues. He has double digits in sacks in three of the past five years, and he had 37 total tackles in 2011. When Tuck is on his game he's capable of double digit sacks, 60-plus tackles and a couple of turnovers, and he should be considered a No. 2 defensive lineman in IDP leagues. He's worth drafting with a mid-round pick this season.

Cameron Wake signed a rich contract extension this offseason, and with it he got a position change. Wake will make the switch to defensive end after spending the early part of his NFL career as a linebacker. He had 22.5 sacks the past two seasons and those numbers would play big as a lineman instead of a linebacker. Wake should be considered a solid No. 2 Fantasy lineman worth drafting with a mid-to-late pick in IDP leagues.

J.J. Watt, HOU

Bye: 8

J.J. Watt crushed expectations as a rookie, and now he'll attempt to get close to his incredible 2011 numbers this season. The defensive end had 56 total tackles with 5.5 sacks and four passes defended, nice totals for a lineman especially in a 3-4 scheme. He's not safe to trust as a No. 1 option since 3-4 linemen don't put up a ton of stats regularly, but he's OK to take a chance on as a low-end No. 2 lineman with a middle- to late-round pick.

Mario Williams, BUF

Bye: 8

The Bills put up some big cash to lure Mario Williams to come to Buffalo, and it's there where he'll return to work as a defensive lineman after playing outside linebacker with the Texans last year. Williams has missed 14 games over the last two seasons, so he's no lock for 16 games, but he's been very productive over his career when he's lined up as a defensive lineman (48 sacks in 77 games there). Williams has double-digit sack production potential and should get some decent tackle totals with it, but that's pretty much it. We wouldn't invest as much in Williams as the Bills did -- consider him a low-end No. 2 Fantasy defensive lineman with a middle- to late-round pick. He's nowhere near the safe pick he once was.

Linebacker

Jon Beason, CAR

Bye: 6

Jon Beason tore his left Achilles' last September and missed 15 games last year. He's expected to be fine, but where he'll play on the field remains to be seen. Beason is a candidate to get bumped to the outside of the defense with the Panthers adding Luke Kuechly, and if that happens then his stats will not be where you might expect them. Of course, if he remains in the middle then he is a candidate for well over 100 total with some good supplemental numbers. If he's healthy and playing inside, he should be considered a borderline No. 1/No. 2 Fantasy linebacker worth a mid-round pick. If he's on the outside then his value drops dramatically to likely a No. 3 LB worth a late-round pick. Remember, he could get moved outside because he's coming back from the torn Achilles' and might not move as well as he once did.

Bye: 6

Bears linebacker Lance Briggs picked up 105 total tackles in 2011 after not doing so in 2010, but his stats continued to dwindle otherwise. He had no sacks, one interception, two forced fumbles and four passes defended. Judging by his body of work over the last two seasons, it looks like Briggs is slowing down. He's still a candidate for over 100 total tackles, which is always nice, but he might not deliver much else. Consider him a middle- to low-end No. 2 Fantasy linebacker worth a middle- to late-round pick; do not be the guy to take him higher than that.

Brian Cushing's move to the inside paid dividends for the Texans last season and should again in 2012. We bet he'll help Fantasy owners as a solid No. 2 linebacker well worth a mid-round pick.

Karlos Dansby, MIABye: 7

Karlos Dansby remains a quality No. 2 linebacker in IDP leagues, and he could see his tackles increase if he mans the middle of Miami's new 4-3 defense. Dansby has at least 95 total tackles in each of the past five seasons, and he could easily go over 100 this year. He also had one interception, two sacks and two forced fumbles last year, and he should be drafted with a mid-round pick in all IDP formats. If he starts at middle linebacker then his stats could increase, which will only help his Fantasy value.

London Fletcher, WASBye: 10

London Fletcher returned to the Redskins and should continue to prove that he's a tackling machine. Fletcher, 36, has at least 100 total tackles for 12 years in a row, and last year he added two interceptions and 1.5 sacks. At some point Fletcher will slow down, but we're not sure when that's going to happen, especially now that he's returned to the Redskins. Consider Fletcher a low-end No. 1 linebacker worth a mid-round pick.

Mason Foster, TBBye: 5

Mason Foster should man the middle of the Bucs defense again in 2012 after there was some talk that he'd move outside. Despite being in the middle of a defense with a weak defensive line, Foster had just 84 total tackles, adding two sacks, two passes defended, and interception and a forced fumble. He's got lots of potential but just isn't worth anything more than a speculative middle- to late-round pick. He's a good quality reserve.

Chad Greenway, MINBye: 11

Chad Greenway had one of his most productive seasons in 2011, and expectations are high that he'll do it again in 2012. With 154 total tackles, Greenway not only set a personal best but also totaled at least 99 tackles in five straight seasons. He also knocked down a couple of passes and added two sacks. So long as tackles count for owners in their leagues, Greenway should be considered a No. 1 linebacker. Look his way with a mid-round pick.

James Harrison, PITBye: 4

James Harrison was one of several Steelers linebackers hampered by an injury in 2011, something he hopes doesn't happen in 2012. Harrison had 59 total tackles in 11 games with nine sacks, way off of what's expected from him. Harrison should be considered a middle- to low-end No. 2 Fantasy linebacker with big upside (he had 100 total tackles in 2010), making him worthy of a middle-round pick, even if he started camp on the PUP list.

James Laurinaitis, STLBye: 9

James Laurinaitis remains one of the bright spots on an otherwise bad defense for the Rams. Laurinaitis had 142 total tackles in 2011 with 105 solo. He now has 376 total tackles in his career with eight sacks, five interceptions and three fumble recoveries. He is a solid No. 1 linebacker in all IDP leagues and he's worth drafting with a mid-round pick. Laurinaitis is a tackle machine and that's what makes him attractive to Fantasy owners. This is a contract year for Laurinaitis and we hope he takes advantage of it with a big season.

Ray Lewis, BALBye: 8

Ray Lewis is getting older, but he's still quite productive. In his 16th season Lewis totaled 95 total tackles with two sacks, seven passes defended and a pair of forced fumbles along with an interception. While this is a step back in productivity compared to his previous seasons, he's still useful in Fantasy and he still has the potential to be very good. Don't be the Fantasy owner who reaches for Lewis, though - treat him like a No. 2 Fantasy linebacker and grab him with a middle-round pick, if not a middle- to late-round pick.

Curtis Lofton, NOBye: 6

Curtis Lofton signed with the Saints this offseason, and he should continue to play well. Playing in a contract year, Lofton posted a career-best 147 total tackles with a career-high seven passes defended and two interceptions, including one for a touchdown. He also forced a fumble and notched one sack. With three consecutive 100-plus tackle seasons, we think he's a safe low-end No. 1 Fantasy linebacker worth a mid-round pick.

Jerod Mayo, NEBye: 9

Jerod Mayo continues to prove he's among the more solid linebackers in IDP leagues. Mayo had 95 total tackles (58 solo) in 2011 with one sack and five pass defenses and three fumble recoveries. Mayo has over 95 tackles in all four seasons in the NFL, and he should once again anchor the New England defense in 2012. Plan on drafting Mayo with a mid-round pick this year and look for him to shine for the Patriots and Fantasy owners again.

Colin McCarthy, TENBye: 11

Colin McCarthy is a good sleeper for Fantasy owners as he prepares to man the middle of the Titans defense in 2012. In seven starts last season in place of vet Barrett Ruud, McCarthy totaled 68 tackles with three passes defended, two forced fumbles and an interception. More of the same is expected for the former Miami Hurricane -- consider him a good No. 3 Fantasy linebacker with some excellent potential. He can probably be had with a middle- to late-round pick.

Von Miller, DENBye: 7

Von Miller is coming off an impressive rookie season in 2011 when he was named NFL Defensive Rookie of the Year. Miller made 64 tackles and had 11.5 sacks despite missing one game and playing the last four contests with a cumbersome cast protecting his surgically repaired right thumb. Now Miller has to prove his rookie year wasn't a fluke, and he should have another solid campaign in 2012. Miller projects as a No. 3 linebacker; if his tackle totals remain high and he continues to reach double digits in sacks then his Fantasy value will be solid. Miller is worth drafting with a mid-round pick.

Paul Posluszny, JACBye: 6

Paul Posluszny stayed healthy for nearly the entire season but still couldn't shake the injury bug, tearing his labrum in his shoulder in the team's meaningless season finale. He should be OK for the start of the season, which is good news since he's been a very reliable tackle machine over the course of his career. He was a big help to the Jaguars last season, totaling 119 tackles with two sacks, a career-high nine passes defended and two interceptions. We suspect he'll remain a big part of the Jaguars defense, and while he'll always be an injury risk, we wouldn't have any problem drafting him as a safe No. 2 Fantasy linebacker with a middle- to late-round pick.

Aldon Smith, SFBye: 9

The 49ers made Missouri's Aldon Smith their top pick in the 2011 NFL Draft, and he lived up to the billing. Smith had a solid debut season in the NFL with 14 sacks in the regular season, the second-most by a rookie in NFL history. Smith, the No. 7 overall pick in last year's draft, had two sacks in the postseason as well. He also added 41 total tackles (35 solo), and he had a fumble recovery. Those numbers are great but they don't quite translate to Fantasy because he's a linebacker, and typically the most productive linebackers in Fantasy rack up tons of tackles. In leagues that don't count tackles, Smith is awesome, but otherwise consider him more of a quality reserve Fantasy option rather than a starter.

Daryl Smith, JACBye: 6

Daryl Smith had another good season in the middle of the Jacksonville defense, and he hopes to build on it in 2012. Smith totaled 107 tackles with 3.5 sacks, an interception, eight passes defended and two forced fumbles. Fantasy owners love Smith's ability to record stats other than tackles, and he's easily worth taking with a middle- to late-round pick as a solid No. 2 Fantasy option. He's actually a pretty good value.

Lawrence Timmons, PITBye: 4

Lawrence Timmons is hoping to play bigger and better in 2012 after his numbers declined in his third year as a starter for the Steelers. He totaled 93 tackles with two sacks, one interception, one forced fumble and five passes defended -- an across-the-board drop without missing a game. Timmons is tough to call a 100-tackle candidate given than he's done it once in his pro career, but with the Steelers moving on from James Farrior, Timmons might get his nose dirty more often. Figure him for a No. 2 Fantasy linebacker worth a mid-round pick at best.

Stephen Tulloch, DETBye: 5

Stephen Tulloch should continue to be a fantastic Fantasy linebacker after posting over 110 total tackles for the third straight season. Tulloch also had a career-best three sacks and two interceptions along with a second-best five passes defended. Tulloch is the perfect under-the-radar Fantasy player and should be considered a low-end No. 1 Fantasy LB worth a mid-round choice.

Patrick Willis, SFBye: 9

Patrick Willis is a No. 1 Fantasy linebacker and one of the best players at his position. He has more than 100 total tackles in his first five years in the NFL, and that should continue this season. In 2011, Willis had 123 tackles (90 solo) with three sacks, three fumble recoveries and 13 passes defended. Though teammate NaVorro Bowman out-produced him, Willis remains a consistent, safe Fantasy option. Plan on drafting Willis with a mid-round pick in all leagues, and he should be one of the first players drafted in all IDP leagues.

Defensive BackYeremiah Bell, NYJ*Bye: 9

Yeremiah Bell signed with the Jets, where he'll battle for playing time and likely a starting spot this summer. Bell has four years in a row with at least 100 total tackles, and in 2011 he contributed two sacks, one interception, one fumble recovery, two forced fumbles and four pass defenses. So long as he lands regular playing time with the Jets, he'll remain a quality Fantasy option. The Jets have become deep at safety and might turn to a "big nickel" defense, which would include Bell being on the field. He's worth a mid-round pick as of now.

Antoine Bethea, IND

Bye: 4

Antoine Bethea continued as a fine stat contributor with the Colts in 2011, totaling a career-best 139 tackles with seven passes defended and two forced fumbles. It's probably safest to consider him a No. 2 Fantasy defensive back on Draft Day thanks to his 100-tackle potential with the capability to accrue pass defense stats. Look for him with a middle- to late-round pick.

Bye: 5

Tyvon Branch signed his franchise tag in early May and will play on a one-year deal in 2012. Branch continues to prove he's a solid defensive back in all IDP leagues. He heads into this year looking for his fourth year in a row with at least 100 total tackles. In 2011, Branch had 109 total tackles (80 solo), one interception, one sack and one fumble recovery. Branch should be considered a No. 1 defensive back on Draft Day worth a mid-round pick.

Brandon Browner, SEA

Bye: 11

Brandon Browner had a breakout rookie season with the Seahawks when he had 54 total tackles and six interceptions. That was nice, but it will be hard for him to duplicate his interception total. Despite the big numbers, he is someone to keep an eye out for in the late rounds of drafts. He could make for a decent reserve defensive back to start the season or fall in line as a choice off waivers during the year.

Brandon Flowers, KC

Bye: 7

Brandon Flowers continues to be a solid defensive back in IDP leagues, and he's worth a late-round pick on Draft Day. Fantasy owners should consider Flowers a No. 3 defensive back since he has 13 interceptions and three defensive touchdowns in four years. He also has at least 59 total tackles each year over that span and should play well again in 2012.

Brent Grimes, ATL

Bye: 7

As expected, the Falcons and cornerback Brent Grimes did not agree to terms on a new contract extension by the July 16 deadline for franchised players. That means Grimes will make $10.262 million in 2012 and test free agency again in 2013. Grimes totaled 49 tackles with an interception and 14 passes defended in 12 games last season. Those totals are weak compared to his previous totals (11 total interceptions and 36 passes defended in 2009 and 2010), so the hope here is that Grimes rebounds in what ends up being a contract year once again in 2012. We'd grab him with a middle- to late-round pick.

DeAngelo Hall, WAS

Bye: 10

DeAngelo Hall has played well each of the past two seasons, and he will look to build off that performance this season. Last year, Hall had 90 total tackles (65 solo), which matched his career high set in 2010. He also added three interceptions. He's worth drafting as a low-end No. 2 defensive back in IDP leagues, and hopefully he can continue to post high tackle totals while still taking away passes from opposing quarterbacks. Just be careful in case he reverts back to his old, disappointing ways, which could be detrimental to Fantasy owners.

Roman Harper, NO

Bye: 6

Roman Harper was the Saints' top defender last season, but questions about how many games he'll be available to the team surround him this season. Harper is expected to be suspended for his part in the Saints' bounty program; no one's sure just how long he'll be out. But for a guy who had 96 total tackles, 7.5 sacks and seven passes defended, he's a big part of Fantasy. Because there's a chance he'll miss a considerable amount of time, Harper shouldn't be drafted with anything other than a late-round pick until we know more about his situation.

Quintin Mikell had a productive year in 2011 and he hopes to play well again in 2012. Mikell had 91 total tackles (75 solo) with one sack, one fumble recovery and two interceptions. Mikell now has at least 88 total tackles and two interceptions in each of the past four seasons. He should be around the same stats again this year and we consider him a No. 2 defensive back in IDP leagues. Plan on drafting him with a late-round pick in all formats.

Patrick Peterson, ARI

Bye: 10

Patrick Peterson had a good season as a rookie defensive back in 2011. He had 64 total tackles (59 solo) with one sack and two interceptions. But he had a tremendous year as a return man. Peterson had four punt returns for touchdowns, and he proved to be as skilled as anyone in the NFL in that area. That doesn't help Fantasy owners much in IDP leagues, but Peterson should continue to improve in his coverage. We like Peterson as a No. 3 defensive back, and he is worth drafting with a late-round pick. If special-teams yardage and scores count, Peterson should get bumped to a middle- to late-round type.

Bernard Pollard, BAL

Bye: 8

The Ravens signed veteran strong safety Bernard Pollard to a three-year contract extension. In his first season in Baltimore last year, Pollard had 75 tackles, two sacks, three forced fumbles and one interception. Pollard has the potential to be an outstanding choice for Fantasy play even though he didn't touch 100 total tackles last year with the Ravens. We'd spend a late pick on him as at least a No. 3 Fantasy DB.

Charles Tillman continued to be an excellent source of tackles for IDP league owners with 99 total, adding three interceptions with two returned for touchdowns, four forced fumbles and 12 passes defensed. Eric Weddle continues to play at a high level and should be considered a solid starting option in all IDP leagues. In 2011, Weddle had 88 total tackles (70 solo) with a career-high seven interceptions and 12 passes defensed. He now has at least 80 total tackles in each of the past four seasons, and we don't expect him to falter this year. He should be drafted with a mid-round pick in all IDP formats.

Tramon Williams saw a lot of action playing on the opposite side of the field as Charles Woodson, but it didn't mean he stunk. In fact, Williams was exceptional as he tallied a career-high 22 passes defensed and four interceptions on top of other nominal stat totals. We think Williams is suitable as a No. 3 Fantasy defensive back but that's about it, so look his way with a late-round pick.

Charles Woodson, GBBye: 10

Can Charles Woodson do it again? Woodson saw his tackle totals dip in 2011, going to 74 total, but he had 17 passes defensed and seven interceptions including a touchdown. He was easily a top Fantasy defensive back and is expected to play as such going forward, especially with him moving to safety in base defense situations and nickelback in nickel defense formations. Fantasy owners should count on Woodson to be just fine for their lineups as he hasn't been a disappointment for a while. Expect Woodson to last until the middle rounds on Draft Day.
